A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

L.

L is called by B. Jonson a letter half-vowelish, which though the Italians (especially the Florentines) abhor, we keep entire with the Latins, and so pronounce. It is not used (says Wilkins) by the Brasileans, nor the men of Japan: others style it the sweetest of all letters. It melteth (B. Jonson adds) in the sounding, and is therefore called a liquid, the tongue striking the root of the palate gently; Wilkins,—the top of the tongue striking against the foremost part of the palate. It unites very easily with C and G in pronunciation, as in Clinch, Gloom, (qqv.) It is doubled, where the vowel sounds hard upon it; with no necessity: unless a syllable follow which may require the continuance of its sound; as in hil-ling, fil-ling, wil-ling.

LAB. "I am no lab;" i.e. no be-lab, or blab; Dut. Labberen. (See BLAB.) Consequentially,—To pour forth from the lips whatever occurs to us; to tell all that we think or know; to prate or talk, thoughtlessly, carelessly, without reserve or discrimination.

— I am no labbe,
Ne though I say it, I n' am not lefe to gabbe.
Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3505.

I have a wif, though that she poure be;
But of hire tongue a labbing shrewe is she.
Id. The Squires Tale, v. 10,301.

LA'BEL, n. } Fr. "Lambeau, a shread, rag, LA'BEL, v. } or small piece of stuff. Labels hanging downe on garlands or crownes, a labando of falling downe," (Minshew.) Skinner prefers the Ger. Lapp. See LAP.

Any thing falling or depending, suspended or appended; a name, title or description, appended, or, (as now used,) otherwise affixed.

Then haste thou a labell, that is shapen like a rule, saue that it is strait and hath no plates on either ende.
Chaucer. The Astrolabe.

It [my beautie] shalbe inuentoried and euery particle and vtensile labell'd to my will.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 5.

The said Sir William said on his oth in the tenth yeare of Henrie the fourth, that before the times of Edward the third, the labell of three points was the different appropriat and appurtenant for the cognizance of the next heire.
Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1390.

Until the subtlest of their conjurors
Seal'd up the labels to his soul—his ears.
Bulter. On the Licentious Age of Charles II.

VOL. II.

LA'BIAL, adj. } Lat. Labium; Fr. Lèvre; LA'BIAL, n. } It. Labbro, labio; the lip.
That may be, that are, (formed by, spoken by) the lips.

The Hebrews have been diligent in it, and have assigned, which letters are labiall, which dental, which gutturall.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 198.

The labials are represented by two curve figures for the lips.—Wilkins. Real Character, pt. iii. c. 14.

P and B are labial: Ph and Bh, or F and V, are labio-dental.—Holder. Elements of Speech.

LA'BILE. } Lat. Labi, to fall or fail. See LABI'LITY. } LAPSE.

But sensibility and intelligence, being by their nature and essence free must be labile, and by their lability may actually lapse, degenerat, and by habit acquire a second nature.
Cheyne. On Regimen, Dis. 5.

LA'BOUR, v. } Fr. Labourer; It. Lavo-rare; Sp. Laborear; Lat.
LA'BOUR, n. } Laborare; (of uncertain etydiligence, with difficulty, with pain; to exert, to persist, pursue, or prosecute with care or diligence, pain or difficulty; to do any thing with exertion or effort.

To Frankis & Normanz, for thar grete laboure.
R. Brunne, p. 72.

Cometh now quath Conscience, ge cristyne, and dyneth
That han labered leely. at this Lente tyme.
Piers Plouhman, p. 386.

And right anon he changed his aray,
And clad him as a poure labourer.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1411.

My lord is hard to me and dangerous,
And min office is ful laborious.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7009.

It maketh me drawe oute of the waie
In soley place by my selfe,
As doth a laborer to delfe.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

— If thou wilt here
Of hem, that whilom vertuous
Were, and therto laborious.
Id. Ib.

I sente you to repe that whereon ye bestowed no labour, other mē laboured, & ye are entred into their labours.
Bible, 1551. John, c. 4.

Dead be thei, that liue not to God, and in the space of this temporall death laboriously purchase themself eternall death.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 16.

With wery trauel, and with laborous paines
Alwaies in trouble and in tediousness.
Wyatt. Complaint vpon Loue, &c.

He [Julius Cæsar] labourously and studiously discussed controversies.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 10.

There is greater store growing in the tops of the mountains then below in the valleis: but it is wonderfull labour-some and also dangerous traueiling vp vnto them and downe again, by reason of the height and steepenesse of the hilles.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 824.

Adam, well may we labour still to dress
This garden, still to tend plant, herb and flower,
Our pleasant task enjoyn'd; but till more hands
Aid us, the work under our labor grows, Luxurious by restraint.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

When down he came like an old o'ergrown oak,
His huge root hewn up by the labourer's stroke.
Drayton. David & Goliath.

— Who but felt of late,
When the fierce foe hung on our brok'n rear
Insulting, and pursu'd us through the deep,
With what compulsion and laborious flight
We sank thus low.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Besides, the king set in a course so right,
Which I for him laboriously had tract.
Drayton. Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

— And forget
Your laboursome and dainty trimmes, wherein You made great Juno angry.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 4.

I sing the conqueror of the universe.
What can an author after this produce?
The labouring mountain must bring forth a mouse.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Then we caused the laborant with an iron rod dexterously to stir the kindled part of the nitre.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 604.

For thankless Greece such hardships have I brav'd,
Her wives, her infants, by my labours sav'd;
Long, sleepless nights in heavy arms I stood,
And sweat laborious days in dust and blood.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

Laboriousness shuts the doors and stops all the avenues of the mind, whereby a temptation would enter, and (which is yet more) leaves no void room for it to dwell there, if by any accident it should chance to creep in.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 10.

Whence labour or pain is commonly reckoned an ingredient of industry; and laboriousness is a name signifying it.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

They intend not your precise abstinence from any light and labourless work.

Brerewood. On the Sabbath, (1630.) p. 48.

The annual labour of every nation is the fund which originally supplies it with all the necessities and conveniences of life, which it annually consumes, and which consists always either in the immediate produce of that labour, or in what is purchased with that produce from other nations.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, vol. i. Intro.

The number of useful and productive labourers, is every where in proportion to the quantity of capital stock which is employed in setting them to work, and to the particular way in which it is so employed.—Id. Ib.

Why does the juice, which flows into the stomach, contain powers which make that bowel the great laboratory, as it is by its situation the recipient, of the materials of future nutrition?—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 7.

Those who have dragged their understanding laboriously along the tiresome circuit of ancient demonstration, may be unwilling to grant that they have taken all these pains to no purpose.—Beddoes. On the Elements of Geometry, Ded. 11.

LABURNUM. See the quotation from Plinie.

The cypresse, walnut, chesnut-trees, and the laburnum, cannot in any wise abide waters. This last named, is a tree proper unto the Alpes, not commonly knowne: the wood thereof is hard and white: it beareth a blossome of a cubite long, but bees will not settle upon it.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 18.

And pale laburnum's pendent flowers display
Their different beauties.—Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

— Laburnum, rich
In streaming gold. Cowper. Task, b. vi.

LA'BYRINTH. } Fr. Labyrinthe; It. and LABYRI'NTHIAN. } Sp. Labarinto; Lat. Labyrinthus; Gr. Λαβυρινθος; Locus viarum ambagibus ad capiendum aptus, from λαβ-ειν, to take.

A place formed to take or hold, confine, or keep within; difficult to pass through or escape from; formed with many windings or turnings, or intricate, involved, or perplexed ways or paths: as applied generally,—intricacy, perplexity.

Since we have finished our obelisks and pyramids, let us enter also into the labyrinth; which we may truly say, are the most monstrous works that ever were devised by the hand of man.—Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 13.

And like a wanton girl, oft doubting in her gate,
In labyrinth-like turns, and twinnings intricate.

Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 22.

Mark, how the labyrinthian turns they take,
The circles intricate, and mystic maze.

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

LACE, v. } Also, in old authors, written LACE, n. } Las. Fr. Lacer, lacet, from the Lat. Laqueus, (Skinner.) The Lat. Laqueus, and It. Laccio, as well as the Eng. Latch, and lace, are the past tense and past part. of the A.S. Læcc-an, læc-gan, læcc-ean, prehendere, apprehendere, to catch, to hold, (Tooke.)

A lace,—any thing which catcheth or holdeth, tieth, bindeth, or fasteneth; applied to cords, or strings, or threads, plain or interwoven of various materials; also to the substance formed by such interweaving.

Laced, as laced coffee, i. e. coffee inter-laced, intermingled, or intermixed with some other ingredient.

Nailing the speres, and helmes bokeling,
Guiding of sheldes, with lainers lacing.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2506.

Hire shoon were laced on hire legges hie.

Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3268.

And therefore sith I know of love's peine,
And wot how sore it can a man destreine,
As he that oft has ben caught in his las,
If you foryeve all holly this trespass.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1888.

And shode he was with malstrie,
With shoone decoped, and with lace.—Id. Rom. of the R.

But certes, lone, I say not in soch wise,
That for to scape out of your lace I ment.

Id. The Complaint of Uenus.

And plant my plaint within her brest,
Who doutlesse may restore againe
My harmes to helth, my ruth to rest,
That laced is within her chaine.

Vncertaine Auctors. The Lower thinks no paine, &c.

And on her legs she painted buskins wore,
Basted with bends of gold on every side,
And mailles betweene, and laced close afore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

For striving more, the more in laces strong Himselfe he tide, and wrapt his winges twaine,
In lymie snares the subtil loupes among.

Id. Muiopotmos.

Cooke. And whom for mutton and kid?
Child. A fine lac'd mutton.

B. Jonson. Neptune's Triumph. A Masque.

He scratch'd the maid, he stole the cream,
He tore her best lac'd pinner:

Prior. The Widow and her Cat.

Mr. Nisby [is] of opinion that lac'd coffee is bad for the head.—Spectator, No. 317.

He is forced every morning to drink his dish of coffee by itself, without the addition of the Spectator, that used to be better than lace to it.—Id. No. 488.

Swift from her head she loos'd, with eager haste,
The yellow curls in artful fillets lac'd.

Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. xv.

By mercers, lacemen, mantua-makers press'd,
But most for ready cash for play distress'd,
Where can she turn?—Jennys. The Modern Fine Lady.

LA'CERATE, v. } Fr. Lacérer; It. Lace-
LACERATION. } rare; Sp. Lacerar; Lat. Lacerare, from the Gr. λακ-ειν, which not only denotes sonare, crepare, but also cum crepitu rumpi, ut fit in iis, quæ lacerantur.

To rend or tear asunder; to sever—with the parts torn, (and not cut evenly.)

And if the heat breaks through the water with such fury, as to lacerate, and lift up great quantities or bubbles of water, too heavy for the air to carry or buoy up, it causeth what we call boyling.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. ii. c. 5. Note 2.

They [nitrous and sulphurous exhalations] force out their way, not only with the breaking of the cloud, but the laceration of the air about it.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

If there be no fear of laceration, pull it out the same way it went in.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 1.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours.

Harvey. On Consumption.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composure.—Id. Ib.

Hither the feble pair, by mutual aid,
The warrior's lacerated corpse convey'd.

Lewis. Statius. Thebais, b. xii.

LACHE. } Minshew derives from the Fr. La'chesse. } Lascher, or Lasche, slacke, loose, slow, remisse. (See LASH.) Skinner,—from Lat. Laxus. Lache, in Chaucer, says Junius, is explained—sluggish, dull, heavie, lazie; and he suspects that lache was the original way of writing lazie. (See LAZY.) The Dut. Laecken, Eng. Lache, is deficere, deesse; the noun Laecke, defectus; and lache may be the same word, he softened into che; meaning—

A defect or failure, a want, (sc.) of strength, of activity, care, diligence: and thus, consequentially, slackness or sluggishness; remissness, negligence.

The lord of hus lacchese, and hus luther slenthe,
By nom hym al that he hadde.—Piers Plouhman, p. 141.

And if he be slowe, and astonyed, and lache, men shall holde him lyke to an asse.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

Then cometh lachesse, that is, he that whan he beginneth any good werk, anon he wol forlete and stint it.

Id. The Persones Tale.

The first point of slouth I call Lachesse, and is the chief of all,
And hath this properly of kinde,
To leuen all thyng behinde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The law also determines that in the king can be no negligence, or laches, and therefore no delay will bar his right.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

LA'CHRYMAL. } Fr. Lachrymal; It. La-
LA'CHRYMARY. } grimal; Sp. Lacrymoso; LA'CHRYMATORY. } Lat. Lacrima; Gr. Δακρυμα, δ changed into l, a tear.

That can or may shed tears, that can or may weep.

No lamps, included liquors, lachrymatories, or tear-bottles, attended these rural urnes, either as sacred unto the Manes or passionate expressions of their surviving friends.

Browne. Urne-Burial, c. 3.

It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it.—Cheyne. Philosophical Principles.

What a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, lachrymary vessels.—Addison. Italy. Rome.

The learned Mr. Wise, late Radclivian librarian, had a glass lachrymatory, or rather a sepulchral aromatic phial, dug up between Noke and Wood-Eaton.

Warton. History of Kiddington, p. 57.

LACK, v. } Dut. Laecken, minuere, dimi-LACK, n. } nuere, attenuare, extenuare, de-LA'CKER. } terere; deficere, deesse;—

To lessen or diminish, to weaken, to fail or be deficient, to be faulty; to want or be wanting.

To diminish, consequentially, to degrade, to find fault with, to blame.

Shakespeare uses the compounds lack-beard, -brain, -linen, -lustre.

Where is & shall be eternall
Joy, incomparable myrth without heaviness,
Loue with charity and grace celestiall
Lasting interminable, lacking no goodness.

R. Gloucester, p. 548. App.

Fair scho was. thei seiden, & gode withouten lak.

R. Brunne, p. 95.

Ac ich wolle lacke no lyf. quath that lady sotthly.

Piers Plouhman, p. 18.

Hem lacked no vitaille that might hem plese.

Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,498.

I trowe that if enuie I wis Knew the best man that is
On this side or beyond the see,
Yet somewhat lacken hem would she.—Id. Rom. of the R.

— If I do that lakke,
Do stripen me and put me in a sakke,
And in the nexte riuer do me drenche.

Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,073.

For lacke of answer, none of us shul dien.

Id. Ib. v. 10,145.

What helpeth a man haue mete,
Where drinke lackethe on the borde.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Lo thus to broke is Christe's folde,
Wherof the flocke, without guide
Deuour'd is on euery side,
In lacke of them, that be vnware Shepherdres.

Id. Ib. Prol.

Thereat the feend his gnashing teeth did grate,
And griev'd, so long to lacke his greedie pray.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

The lack of one may cause the wrack of all;
Although the lackers were terrestrial gods,
Yet will they ruling reel, or reeling fall.

Davies. Wit's Pilgrimage.

Frugal, where lack, supplies with what redounds,
And here bestows what noxious there abounds.

Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. i.

But tho' each Court a jester lacks,
To laugh at monarchs to their backs,
(Yet) all mankind behind their backs
Supply the honest jester's place.

Dodsley. The Kings of Europe.

LA'CKER, v. } To lay on, to cover with LA'CKER, or } lacquer, or lacque, i. e. with a LACK, n. } preparation of lac. It. Lacca.
See LAKE, and the quotation from Dampier.

The lack of Tonquin is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lacquered, are made of fir, or pine tree. The workhouses where the lacker is laid on, are accounted very unwholesome.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1638.

What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wig, flow'd gown, and lacqu'd chair.

Pope. Imitation of Horace, Ep. 1.

Alum and lacque, and clouded tortoiseshell.

Dyer. The Fleece, b. iv.

In vases, flow'r pots, lamps, and sconces,
Intaglios, cameos, gems and bronzes,
These eyes have read through many a crust
Of lacker, varnish, grease and dust.

Cawthorn. The Antiquarians.

Or oblong buckle, on the lacker'd shoe,
With polish'd lustre, bending elegant
In shapely rim.

Jago. Edge Hill, b. iii.

LA'CKEY, v. } Fr. Lacquay; It. Lacayo.
LA'CKEY, n. } Junius (who proposes the verb to lacke; q. d. one who lacks, is poor or indigent, and therefore servile) interprets the Goth. Laik-an, saltare, exultare. Wachter,—the Ger. Lak-en, the same; and also currere, and lakei, curror. Ibre,—the Sw. Lacka, currere, and Lack-ere, cursor, a runner. Hence also the Eng. Leg; and thence a lacquey, one who uses his legs, (a legger.)

A runner, a running follower or attendant, a runner of errands, a footboy; generally, a follower or attendant.

Tueye luther lackes he adde wyth hym al out.

R. Gloucester, p. 389.

Than they of Heynnaute bought lyttle nagges to ryde at theyr ease, (and they sent back) theyr lackettes and pages.
 Berners. Proissart. Cronycle, c. 18.

To a prince of ours, a page of theirs they set,
 And a French lacquey to an English lord.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Harp. To clear your doubts, he doth return in triumph,
 Kings lackeyngs by his triumphal chariot.
 Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act i. sc. 1.

What cause could make him so dishonourable
 To drive you so on foot, unfit to tread
 And lackey by him, 'gainst all womanhead.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

So dear to Heaven is saintly chastity,
 That when a soul is found sincerely so,
 A thousand liveried angels lackey her.—Milton. Comus.

Lord of the Seasons! They in courtly pomp Lacquay thy presence, and with glad dispatch
 Pour at thy bidding, o'er the land and sea.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iii.

LACO'NICK. } Fr. "Laconizer, to live

LA'CONISM. } the Lacedæmonians, either in LA'CONIZE, v. } short and pithy speech or in hard life, (Plutarch, Explanation of Terms.)

You that were once so economic,
 Quitting the thrifty style laconic,
 Turn prodigal in makeronic.

Denham. A Dialogue between Sir J. Pooley & Mr. Killegrew.

At Gaunt we fell upon a Cappucine novice, which wept bitterly, because he was not allowed to be miserable. His head had now felt the razor, his back the rod: all that laconical discipline pleased him well.

Bp. Hall, Dec. 1. Ep. 5.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning born at Saint Albanes, and desirous to enter into religion there, after hee had signified his desire, wrote to the abbot laconically.

Camden. Remaines. Allusions.

The hand of providence writes often by abbreviations, hieroglyphicks, or short characters, which, like the Laconism on the wall (Dan. iii. 25) are not to be made out but by a hint or key from that Spirit which indited them.

Brown. Christ. Mor. i. 25.

And I grow laconic even beyond laconicisms, for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long.—Pope. To Swift, Aug. 17, 1736.

King Agis, therefore, when a certain Athenian laughed at the Lacedæmonian short swords, and said the jugglers would swallow them with ease upon the stage, answered in his laconic way, And yet we can reach our enemies' hearts with them.—Langhorne. Plutarch, vol. i. Lycurgus.

LA'CTAGE. } Lat. Lac, απο του γαλακτος, ferred from the notion of explaining or making plain and clear, to that of brightening, of shining.

Lacteal,—milky, bearing or producing milk, or a liquid resembling milk.

It is thought that the offering of Abel, who sacrificed of his flocks, was only wool, the fruits of his shearing; and milk, or rather cream, a part of his lactage.

Shuckford. On the Creation, vol. i. p. 79.

(Yet were it no easie probleme to resolve) why also from lactary or milky plants which have a white and lacteous juice dispersed through every part, there arise flowers blew and yellow.—Brown. Fulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

After it hath been strained through those curious co-landers, the lacteal veins, I might also observe its impregnations from the glands and lymphæducts.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 9.

I might next trace it through the several meanders of the guts, the lacteals, and into the blood.—Id. Ib.

This lactean whiteness ariseth from a great number of little stars constipated in that part of heaven, flying so swiftly from the sight of our eyes, that we can perceive nothing but a confused light.—Moxon. Astron. Cards, p. 13.

Among pot-herbs are some lactescent plants, as lettuce, endive, and dandelion, which contain a most wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling, extremely useful in all diseases of the liver.

Arbuthnot. On Aliments, Prop. 4.

And this lactescence, if I may so call it, does also commonly ensue, when spirit of wine being impregnated with those parts of gums or other vegetable concretions, that are supposed to abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the tincture or solution.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 219.

He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules of that sort they call conglomeratæ, made up of an infinite number of little knots or kernels, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

LAD. } Junius derives from A. S. Læd-an, LA'DKIN. } ducere, to lead or guide; because children are led or educated to many virtues. Skinner and Lye prefer A. S. Leode, people, (see the quotation from Piers Plouhman); also, as the latter asserts, signifying juvenis; but leode means a companion, follower, or attendant, and may itself be from læd-an, to lead. Lad will thus mean—

One who, on account of his tender years, is under a leader, guide, or director: a male child, a boy; generally, a youth; or one acting in the services usually performed by youth. See LASS.

And the more he hath and wynneth the world at hus wille
 And lordeth in leedes the lasse good he needeth.

Piers Plouhman, p. 187.

Be large ther of while hit laste to leedes that ben needy.

 And if the seas prove faithful to their charge,
 Great are your gains.—Cooke. Hesiod. Works & Days, b. ii.

LADE, v. } A. S. Hlad-an, to draw out.
LA'DLE. } A. S. Hlædle. Camden says—that lade is a passage of water, and that aquæductus in the old Glossarie is translated water-lada. Hence it appears that hladan, to draw out, is merely a consequential usage of læd-an, to lead, guide, or conduct; and that water-lada is a conduit for water; that by which water may be conducted or drawn off. The application is,—

To dip (sc. some vessel or implement) into water or other liquid, and throw out the contents or quantity received.

And lerede men a ladel bygge. with a long stele.
 Piers Plouhman, p. 380.

Alas that he ne had hold him by his ladel!
 Chaucer. The Manciples Prologue, v. 17,000.

Some stirr'd the molten owre with ladles great.
 Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Like one that stands vpon a promontorie,
 And spies a farre-off shore, where he would tread,
 Wishing his foot were equall with his eye,
 And chides the sea, that sunders him from thence Saying hee'le lade it dry to haue his way.

Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii.

"Oh! may your altars ever blaze!

LA'DY. } Tooke has written more ela-LA'DIED. } borately than usual upon the LA'DYFY, v. } origin of this word, and he traces LA'DILY. } it to the A. S. Hlaf, the past part. of hlif-ian, to raise. He supposes hlaf, first, by receiving the common participial termination, ed, to become hlaf-ed, then by contraction hlafd, and further by the addition of the common adjective termination ig, hlafid-ig, or by omitting the initial h, laf, lafed, lafid, lafid-ig, the ig being as usual softened to y. By the mere suppression of the f, lafid-y becomes lady; meaning one lifted, raised or elevated, (sc.) to the rank of her husband or lord, (see LORD.) Serenius finds the word written lafid-a in Goth. and Dr. Jamieson lafid-e in Icelandic; and as in R. Gloucester, it is written leuedy. See Jamieson, in v. Laird.

That heo comen alle to London the hey men of this lond,
 And the leuedys al so god, to ys noble fest wyde.
 R. Gloucester, p. 156.

A lovely ladie rode him faire beside,
Upon a lowly ass more white than snow;
Yet she much whiter; but the same did hide
Under a vele, that wimpled was full low.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

To be plain argues honesty; but to be pleasing argues discretion. Sores are not to be anguished with a rustick pressure, but gently stroak'd with a ladies hand.
Fellham, pt. i. Res. 8.

LAG, adj. } Læng, long; as we say, he staves LA'GGARD. } long, hee's long a comming. Min-LA'GGER. } shew derives from log, truncus, and it is not improbable that it may have the same origin, viz. the Goth. Lag-yan, A. S. Lecgan, to lay or lie; and, consequentially, to remain at rest, inactive, sluggish.

To move slowly or sluggishly, to tarry or remain behind, to come or follow slowly after; to come in late or latterly, at the latter end, after others.

For a gunstone I say had all to lagged his cap.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

When with the luggage such as lagg'd behind,
And that were set the carriages to keep,
'Gainst God and Moses grievously repin'd, Wanting a little sustenance and sleep.

And bids afflicted worth retire to peace.
Johnson. Vanity of Human Wishes.

LA'NER, Fr. straps or thongs, (Tyrwhitt.)
Skinner writes it lamers, thongs; and suggests the Lat. Laminae.

Nailing the speres, and helmes bokeling,
Guiding of sheldes, with lainers lacing.
Chaucer. The Knights Tale, v. 2507.

LAIR, or } Skinner writes it leer, — clearly LARE. } enough, he says, from Ger. Läger, cubile, and this from liegen, to lay. It is immediately from lay, or lai, layer or lair.

The place where any one (deer or other animal) lays or is laid. Applied to the land or pasture in which they lie. In Hardyng's Chronicle (quoted by Dr. Jamieson) the place where Arthur was laid in burial.

The mynster church, this day of great repayre
Of Glastenbury, where now he has his leyre.
Harding. Chronicle, p. 77.

As from his laire the wilde beast where he wouns
In forrest wilde, in thicket, brake or den.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

— Where nature shall provide Green grass and fat'ning clover for their fare!
And mossy caverns for their noontide lare:
With rocks above to shield the sharp nocturnal air.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 3.

But the sea-fowl is gone to her nest,
The beast is laid down in his lair;
Even here is a season of rest
And I to my cabin repair.
Cowper. Verses, supposed to be written by A. Selkirk.

LAIT, n. Perhaps from the A. S. Lat-an, æstimare, reputare, judicare. Skinner prefers the Fr. Laicter, lactare.

Incessantly busie her prey for to gete,
To bring to the lure whom she doth lait.
Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

LA'ITY. See LAY.

LAKE. Tyrwhitt remarks,—it is difficult to say what sort of cloth is meant. Laecken, Belg.
signifies both linen and woollen cloth, (Kilian.) Fine cloth and lawn (says Skinner.) Somner has lach, chlamys, a kind of garment.

He didde next his white lere
Of cloth of lake fin and clere.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,787.

LAKE. Fr. Lacque; It. and Low Lat. Lacca.
(See Menage and Martinius.) A word, says the former, of Arabic origin. (And see the quotation from Boyle.) Fr. "Lacque, sanguine; rosie or rubie colour. The true lacca is an Armenian gum, used in the dyeing of crimson, and afterwards (grown artificial) employed by painters," (Cot-grave.) And see LACKER.

— Architecture, who no less
A goddess is, than painted cloth, deal board, Vermillion, lake, or crimson can afford Expression for.—B. Jonson. Expostulat. with Inigo Jones.

I met the other day, Pyrophilus in an Italian book, that treats of other matters, with a way of preparing what the author calls a lacca of vegetables, by which the Italians mean a kind of extract fit for painting, like that rich lacca in English, commonly called lake, which is employed by painters as a glorious red.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 782.

LAKE. Fr. Lac; It. and Sp. Lago; Lat.
Lacus, which Vossius thinks may be from the Gr.
Λακίς, hiatus terræ; and that it means, terra fissa recipiens aquam; and hence applied to other recipients of liquid substances. Lake, in Wiclif, is in the common version wine-press. The usual application is to—

A large expanse of water within land, or having no immediate connexion with the sea.

And the lake [lacus] was trodun withoute the citee, and the blood went out of the lake til to the bridelis of horsis bi furlongis a thousynde and sixe hundride.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 14.

And sprinkles eke the water counterfet,
Like unto blacke Auernus lake in hell.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

So stretcht out huge in length the arch-fiend lay Chain'd on the burning lake.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Our spacious lakes; thee, Larius, first; and next Bonacus, with tempest'ous billows vex.
Dryden. Virgil, Geor. 2.

I started up, and looking out, observed by the light of the moon the lake [Desensano] in the most dreadful agitation, and the waves dashing against the walls of the inn, and resembling the swellings of the ocean, more than the petty agitation of inland waters.—Eustace. Italy, vol. i. c. 5.

LA'KENS. The diminutive of our lady, i. e.
ladykin, (Steevens.)

By our lakens brother husband (qh. she,) but as properlye as y^t was preached, yet woulde I rather abyde the perill of breeding wormes in my bely by eating of fleshe without broadde, then to eate with my meate the broadde that I wist well wer poisoned.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 849.

Gon. By'r laken, I can go no further, sir,
My old bones akes.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 3.

LAMB, v. } Goth. A. S. Dut. Ger. and LAMB, n. } Swed. Lamb, agnus. The origin LA'MBKIN. } of the word, says Junius, improbably enough, is to be sought, prefixo l, from the initial letters of the Gr. Λαμβος. This etymology, says Wachter, Stiernhiem despises, but suggests no other. Ihre remarks,—Apud Armo-ricos lamma notat saltare, which does not ill suit this kind of animal. Minshew,—from lamb-ere, to lick. It is applied to—

The young offspring of the sheep; (met.) to any one having the meekness, innocence of a lamb.

Non lyckore ys brother hym nas, than an wolf ys a lombe.
R. Gloucester, p. 280.

And gaf the kyngdome to hus knave, that kept sheep &

Wiclif. Luke, c. 10.

Go your wayes: beholde, I sende you forthe as lambes among wolues.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

So 'twixt them both they not a lambkin left;
And, when the lambes fail'd, the old sheepes lives they reft.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

I finde those that commend use of apples, in spleneticke and this kinde of melancholy (lamb-wool some call it) which howsoever approved must certainly be corrected of cold rawnesse and winde.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 395.

In the warm folds their tender lambkins lie
Apart from kids, that call with human cry.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

— Ev'n while I sing,
Yon wanton lamb has crop't the woodbine's pride,
That bent beneath a full-blown load of sweets,
And fill'd the air with perfume.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

Nor dread we more the rigour of the year,
Than the fell wolf the fearful lambkins dreads
When he the helpless fold by night invades.
Beattie. Virgil, Past. 7.

LA'MBENT. } Lat. Lambens, present
LA'MBATIVE, adj. } part. of lambere, to lick.
LA'MBATIVE, n. } Lambere, from the Gr. Λαμ-βειν, which means (Vossius) to lick or lap, or to drink by licking or lapping, and itself seems to be formed from the sound.

Licking, touching lightly—as with the tongue;
moving about or around, as if licking, or touching lightly.

The star that did my being frame
Was but a lambent flame. Cowley. Destiny.

Sudden a circling flame was seen to spread
With beams refulgent round Iulus' head;
Then on his locks the lambent glory preys,
And harmless fires around his temples blaze.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. ii.

Upon the mantle-tree, for I am a pretty curious observer, stood a pot of lambative electuary, with a stick of liquorish.
Tatler, No. 266.

Id. Ib. Ser. 18.

He [Peter] could but very lamely have executed such an office.—Id. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

Though some part of them [its imperfections] are covered in the verse (as Erichonius rode always in a chariot to hide his lameness;) such of them as cannot be concealed you will please to connive at, though, in the strictness of your judgment, you cannot pardon.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

He did by a false step, sprain a vein in the inside of his leg, which ever after occasioned him to go lamish.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon, vol. ii. James Shirley.

Even lameness from its leafy pallet crawls,
To join the favour'd gang.—Grainger. Sugar Cane, b. iii.

LAMPO'ON, v. } Cotgrave has lamponnier, LAMPO'ON, n. } a fond or idle companion,
LAMPO'ONER. } probably from the old Fr.
Lamper, potare, to drink, (Lacombe;) and from the ribaldry, slander, and satire in which drinking companions indulge themselves, the word may have derived its application to—Satire or abuse of persons, their peculiarities or failings.

"Mr. Bettesworth," answered he, "I was in my youth acquainted with great lawyers, who, knowing my disposition to satire, advised me, that if any scoundrel or blockhead whom I had lamponned should ask, 'Are you the author of this paper?' I should tell him that I was not the author; and therefore I tell you, Mr. Bettesworth, that I am not the author of those lines."—Johnson. Life of Swift.

Like her, who miss'd her name in a lamponn,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon.

Wachter, and lhre.) Wachter and Lye think the root preserved in the Armoric Lança, jaculari, vibrare, to throw, to brandish. A lance will thus signify, generally, any thing thrown; and lance, the verb, or lanch, (qv.)

To throw; and (from the form and purpose of a lance) consequentially, to pierce or penetrate; to cut with a lancer or lancet, or small lance, or sharp-pointed instrument.

Lance, in ba-lance, and used uncompounded by Spenser, may be the same word, applied conse-quentially; poise, equipoise.

In ys rygt hond ys lance he nom, that ycluped was Ron.
R. Gloucester, p. 174.

LA'NDLESS. } May it not be formed of (Goth.
Laggy,) Lay-en-ed, Lan-ed, Land?

As a substance, it is opposed to water.
It is also applied to the inhabitants of the land, of the country, or region.

It is not unfrequent in composition; and some instances from our elder writers are given.

Landlady and landlord are applied to the mistress and master of the house, more especially of a public one.

To Daintry with a land-wind were wee borne.
Corbet. Iter Boreale.

Thus royal sir, to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year.
Dryden. To his Majesty.

A tax laid upon land seems hard to the land-holder, because it is so much money going visibly out of his pocket:
and therefore as an ease to himself, the landholder is always forward to lay it upon commodities.
Locke. On the Lowering of Interest.

A good conscience is a port which is land-locked on every side, and where no winds can possibly invade, no tempests can arise.—Dryden. Virgil. Geor. Pref.

Divines but peep on undiscover'd worlds,
And draw the distant landscape as they please.
Id. Don Sebastian, Act ii. sc. 1.

The prettiest landscape I ever saw, was one drawn on the walls of a dark room, which stood opposite on one side to a navigable river, and on the other side to a park.
Spectator, No. 414.

As soon as the land of any country has all become private property, the landlords, like all other men, love to reap where they never sowed, and demand a rent even for its natural produce.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6.

Religion's harbour, like th' Etrurian bay Secure from storms, is land-locked ev'ry way.
Harte. Thomas à Kempis.

Nothing can be better fancied than to make this enormous son of Neptune use the sea for his looking-glass; but is Virgil so happy when his little landsman says, *Non sum adeo

The louvre or lantern (see the quotations from Holland and Walpole) "is (says Steevens) in ancient records called lanternium, and is a spacious round or octagonal turret full of windows, by means of which cathedrals, and sometimes halls, are illuminated." Note on Romeo and Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

He loked lyk a lanterne. al hus lyf after.

Piers Ploughman, p. 137.

Ne me teendith not a lanterne and puttith it undir a bushel.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

And tho she hath do set vp light

In a lanterne on high alofte

Upon a toure, where she goth ofte.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Cambden! the nourice of antiquitie,

And lanterne unto late succeeding age.

Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

And hence came the louters and lanternes reared over the roofes of temples, which are so curiously wrought in earth.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 12.

Happy Augusta! law-defended town!

Here no dark lanterns shade the villain's frown.

Gay. Trivia, b. iii.

— Who, in haste

Alighting, turns the key in her own door,
And, at the watchman's lantern borrowing light,
Finds a cold bed her only comfort left.

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

The Lady-chapel (now Trinity church) at Ely, and the lantern-tower in the same cathedral, are noble works of the same time.—Walpole. Anec. of Painting, vol. i. p. 195. Note.

Besides the lanterne that crowns the dome, or rather terminates the cella, is by much too large for the edifice, and seems to crush it by its weight.

Eustace. Italy, vol. ii. c. 3. p. 82.

LA'PPET.

LA'PPER.

LA'PPUL.

LA'PPING, n.

LA'PLING.

It is usual to consider lap, to fold, and lap, to lick, as two words; and for the first to refer to the A. S. Lappe, which Somner interprets,—a small piece of any thing, the coast, or hem of a garment; Dut. and Ger. Lappen, consuere, sarcire: and for the second to the A. S.
Lappian; Dut. and Ger. Lappen; Fr. Lapper, lambere, to lick. But the word in all its applications, seems to be one and the same, with one and the same meaning, affording a sufficient cause for the various applications, viz. to fold or turn over; as a dog in licking with his tongue; as an edge, or border, or hem of cloth or other material:
the clothes over the knees, thighs, or breast. To lap, then, may be explained,—

To fold or turn over, to enfold, to involve, to enwrap.

To fold or turn (the tongue) over, and conse-quentially, to lick up.

Benes and baken apples, thei brouht in here lappes.

Piers Ploughman, p. 144.

Joseph lapped it in a clene sendel.—Wiclif. Math. c. 27.

His wallet lay befor him in his lappe.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 688.

These woordes said she, and with the lappe of her garne-ments ipleited in a frounce she dried myn iyen, that weren full of the wawes of my wepynges.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

And bad this sergeant that he prively

Shulde this child ful softe wind and wrappe,

With alle circumstances tendrely,

And carry it in coffre, or in a lappe.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8461.

That mantil lapped hir aboute.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For many a vice, as saith the clerke

There hongen vpon slouthes lappe.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

And saye moreouer vnto him, thus sayeth the Lord: in the place where dogges lapped the bloude of Naboth, shal dogges lappe euē thy bloud also.

Bible, 1551. 3 Kings, c. 21.

But therewith all there springs a kinde of tares,

Which are vile weedes and must be rooted out

They choake vp grace, and lap it fast in snares.

Gascoigne. Vpon the Fruite of Fetters.

This is the light and perfectness, whiche Moses put in the breast lappe of judgement.

Bible, 1551. Deuteronomy, c. 33. Note.

The David arose & cut of a lap of Saul's cote priuili.

Id. 1 Kings, c. 24.

And gathered thereof coloquintidaes his lappesfull.

Id. 4 Kings, c. 4.

Their limber branches were so lepp'd together,

As one enamour'd had of other leen.

Drayton. The Man in the Moon.

And ever against eating cares,

Lap me in soft Lydian airs

Married to immortal verse.—Milton. L'Allegro.

Or palmie hillock, or the flourie lap

Of some irriguous valley spred her store.

Id. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Indulgent Fortune does her care employ,

And, smiling, broods upon the naked boy:

Her garment spreads, and laps him in the fold,

And covers with her wings, from nightly cold.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

Are we pleased? then showers of blessings must descend on our heads, then floods of wealth must run into the laps of our favourites; otherwise we are not satisfied.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 23.

They may be lappers of linnen, and bailiffs of the manor.

Swift.

You must not stream out your youth in wine, and live a laping to the silk and dainties.—Hewitt. Ser. (1658,) p. 7.

They read th' example of a pious wife,
Redeeming, with her own, her husband's life;
Yet, if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lapdog sooner than their lord.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

As those casual lappings and flowing streamers were imitated from nothing, they seldom have any folds or chiaro scuro.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

Half a dozen squeezed plaits of linnen, to which dangled behind two unmeaning pendants, called lappets, not half covering their strait-drawn hair.—Id. Ib.

And sails with lappet-head and mincing airs
Duly at chink of bell to morning pray'rs.

Cowper. Truth.

LAPIDARY. Fr. Lapider, lapidaire, LAPID'ROUS. lapidifier; It. Lapidare, lapidario, lapideo, lapidazione; LAPIDE'SCENT. Sp. Lapizar, lapidares, lapideo; Lat. Lapidarius, lapis; LAPIDE'SCENCE. Gr. Λαας, a stone.
LAPIDE'SCENCY. One who works in, deals LAPID'FICK. in, stone; one who works
LAPID'FICAL. or deals in precious stones.
LAPIDIFICATION.
LAPIDIST.

The lapidaries now shall learn to set
Their diamonds in gold, and not in jet.
Brome. To his Mistress.

Induration, or lapidification, of substances more soft, is likewise another degree of condensation; and is a great alteration in nature.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 82.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter before it was concrete into a stone some small toad (or some toad-spawn) which being not able to extricate itself and get out again, might remain there imprisoned till the matter about it were condensed and compacted into a stone.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Beneath the surface of the Earth there may be sulphureous, and other steams, that may be plentifully mixed with water, and there, in likelihood, with lapidescent liquors.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 557.

They [chymists, &c.] do with much confidence entirely ascribe the induration and especially the lapidescence of bodies to a certain secret internal principle, lurking for the most part in some liquid vehicle.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 434.

Hereof in subterraneous cavities, and under the earth there are many to be found in several parts of Germany; which are but the lapidescences and petrificative mutations of hard bodies.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 23.

Arguing, that the atoms of the lapidifick, as well as of the saline principle, being regular, do therefore concur in producing regular stones.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 3. p. 14.

Boetius is of the same opinion, not ascribing its [coral] concretion unto the air but the coagulating spirits of salt, and lapidifical juice of the sea, which entering the parts of that plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it into a lapideous substance.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 5.

Some stones exceed all other bodies [in hardness.] among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factious stones of chymists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

They hired another house of Richard Lions, a famous lapidary, one of the sheriffs, who was beheaded by the Kentish rebels in the reign of Richard II.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

LAPSE, v. Lat. Labi, lapsus, to fall.
LAPSE, n. To fall, to descend, to glide, slide or slip, or pass away; to cause to fall, to let fall; to fail.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy sonne to chide,
That, laps't in time and passion, lets go by
Th' important acting of your dread command.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

— Once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit and enthrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

— About me round I saw Hill, dale, and shade woods, and sunnie plaines,
And liquid lapse of murmuring streams.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

— Yet know withal,
Since thy original lapse, true libertie
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells.

Id. Ib. b. xii.

The canon was made for presentation within six months, and title of lapse given to the bishop in case the chapter were patron, from the bishop to them if he were patron.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 8. Selden. Illust.

Who can imagine a God of wisdom and sincerity, not to say goodness, should so deal with the generality of lapsed men, as no good, wise, honest, or true-hearted man could have the face to deal with one like himself?

Whitby. Five Points, Disc. 1. c. 3. s. 1.

Either our Saviour's performances do respect all men, or some men (the far greater part of men) do stand upon no other terms, than those of the first creation or rather of the subsequent lapse and condemnation.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

The solidity and simplicity of this monument [the mausoleum of Cecilia Metella] are worthy of the republican era in which it was erected, and have enabled it to resist the incidents and survive the lapse of two thousand years.

Eustace. Italy, vol. ii. c. 6.

LAPWING. A. S. Lepewinc, hleapwince; formed (Skinner) of hleap-an, to leap, and wince, a wing, because it so quickly moves, expands, and claps its wings together. By Minshew, because it laps or claps the wings so often. In Fr. Van-neau.

The false lapwing, full of trecherie.

Chaucer. The Assembly of Fowles.

For anone after he was chaunged,
And from his owne kinde straunged,
A lapwyne made he was.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The lapwing hath a piteous, mournful cry,
And sings a sorrowful and heavy song.
But yet she's full of craft and subtilty,
And weepeth most being farthest from her young.

Phoenix & Turtle.

Changed to a lapwing by the avenging God,
He made the barren waste his lone abode,
And oft on soaring pinions hover'd o'er
The lofty palace then his own no more.

Beattie. Virgil, Past. 6.

LARBOARD. Vox nautica, (says Skinner;) so the left side of a ship is called, perhaps, q. d. lever board, from the Lat. Lævus, and board. Lar may be a contraction of laveer, and that side of the ship so called because it laveers or lies obliquely to the starboard.

The Portuguese beginning their voyage not far from the same streights, leave Africk on the larboard, and bend their course to the east.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 1. s. 2.

When on the larboard quarter they descry
A liquid column tow'ring shoot on high.

Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 2.

LARCENY. Fr. Larcin, larrecin; Lat. Latrocinium. See the quotation from Blackstone.

1. Larciny, or theft, by contraction for latrocinium, latrocinium, is distinguished by the law into two sorts.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 17.

LARD, v. Fr. Lard; It. and Sp. Lardo;
LARD, n. Lat. Lardum, which Macrobius LARDER. conceives to be contracted from LARDERER. largæ aridum; Vossius prefers the LARDERY. Gr. Λαρων, sweet; whence Λαρων, bene curatum, pingue, well cured, fat. Lard is applied to—

Hog's flesh, bacon; to the fat of it.

To lard,—to fatten, to cover with fat, to grease; to mix or stuff, or lay bacon or the fat of bacon into other meats; generally, to intermix, to interlay. See INTERLARD.

Larder,—a store-room for lard; generally, for any provided meats.

The larderer, (larderarius), or superintendent of provisions, is recorded by Spelman, (Gloss.)

& ther to fyue hundreth kie ilk gere to his lardere.

R. Brunne, p. 28.

Raune of other mens folde
Maketh his larder, and payeth nought.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The lagging ox is now unbound,
And larding the new turn'd-up ground,
Whilst Hobbins, alike o'er-laid,
Takes his coarse dinner to the shade.

Cotton. Noon Quatrains.

Whereupon she got a piece of lard with the skin on and rubbed the warts all over with the fat side.

Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 997.

The citizens of Winchester had ouersight of the kitchen and larderie.—Holinshed. Hen. III. an. 1235.

The blood of oxen, goats, and ruddy wine,
And larded thighs on loaded altars laid.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

— Terribly gay
In his buff doublet, larded o'er with fat
Of slaughter'd brutes, the well-oil'd champion shone.
Somerville. Hobbinsol.

The lard is of great use in medicine, being an ingredient in various sorts of plasters, either pure, or in the form of unguent.—Pennant. British Zoology. The Hog.

LARGE. Fr. Large, largesse; It. Largo, LARGELY. larghezza; Sp. Largo, largueza;
LARGENESS. Lat. Largus; of unsettled etymology. Scaliger and Scheidius think from the Gr. Λαυπος, copious, abundant.

It is applied to any thing that exceeds the usual or common number or magnitude; to any thing amplified or magnified, increased or augmented, extended, expanded, or spread. As—

Big or bulky, great, ample, wide, extensive, or comprehensive; (met.) abundant, copious, plentiful.

Largess; Fr. Largesse,—a gift or donation; proceeding from the largeness of the donor's bounty; from Lat. Largiri, to give largely. See the quotation from the Rom. of the Rose.

And tho he was so large & hende of hys giftes al so.

R. Gloucester, p. 109.

To chyrche & to pouere men he gef vorst, as he ssolde,
To abbeyes & to priories largelyche of hys golde.

Id. p. 383.

Large er tho londes, that his eldres wonnen.

R. Brunne, p. 144.

The kyng tille him therfore did grete curteysie, Wynnyng for his lore he gaf him largelie.—Id. p. 263.

Hys los sprong so wyde sone of ys largesse.

But Crist beinge a bisschop of goodis to comynge entride bi a largere and parfiterie tabernacle.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 9.

In the same wise is he to blame, that spendeth over largely.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

And after on the daunce he went Largesse, that set all her entent
For to ben honourable and free,
Of Alexander's kinne was shee:
Her moste joie was ywis,
When that she yafe, and saied, haue this.—Id. R. of the R.

So that into the large strete
This horse with great solemnitee
Was brought within the citee.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

I bid not that thou do wast,
But holde largesses in his measure.—Id. Ib. b. v.

On Newe Yeres day, the king, [Henry VII.] being in a riche gowne dynede in his chamber, and gave to his officers of armes vi. l. of his largesse, wher he was cryed in his style accustomed.—Leland. Collectanea, vol. iv. p. 234. (From a MS. in the Harleian Library.)

A passage down the Earth, a passage wide,
Wider by farr than that of after-times
Over mount Sion, and, though that were large,
Over the promis'd land to God so dear.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

— Nor ever thence
Had ris'n or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
Left him at large to his own dark designs.—Id. Ib. b. i.

For want of instruction, whiche hath beene largelie promised, and slacklie performed, and other sudden and inurious denial of helpe voluntarie offered.

Holinshed. Desc. of Britaine, c. 11.

While the porter stood wondring at the largeness of the beast, Philomenes ran him through with his boar-spear.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 3. s. 14.

The great donatives and largesses, upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to enflame all men's courages.

Bacon. Ess. Of Kingdoms & Estates.

Though straiter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine:
Like the blest-oil, the widow's lasting feast,
Your treasure, as you pour'd it out, increas'd.

Waller. Of her Royal Highness, Mother to the P. of Orange.

For that our Maker has too largely given,
Should be return'd in gratitude to Heaven.

Pomfret. The Choice.

Circles are prais'd, not that abound
In largeness, but th' exactly round:
So life we praise, that does excell
Not in much time, but acting well.

Waller. Long and Short Life.

The paltry largess, too, severely watch'd,
Ere given, and every face observed with care,
That no intruding guests usurp a share.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 2.

Such as made Sheba's curious queen resort
To the large-hearted Hebrew's famous court.
Waller. To the Countess of Carlisle.
And find, of sheep, and goats, a mingled flock,
Under the shelter of a cavern'd rock,
The largest and the best the pirate band
Seiz'd, and prepar'd a banquet on the strand.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. iv.

LARK, n. A. S. Lafere; Dut. Lerke, lowerke; Ger. Lerch; Sw. Lærkia. Wachter thinks the word compounded of the Celtic Laf, the voice, and orka, to be strong, and thus to signify cantu pollens, powerful in song. Vossius (de Vit. b. i. c. 2. and Etymol. in v. Galerita) forms it from the Ancient Gallic Alauda; in Modern French, Alouette; Dut. Leurik, from Alaurik. The word Alauda was unknown to the Romans until Cæsar gave that name to a legion "enrolled from the countries beyond the Alpes," (Suet. in Vitâ, c. 24.) The Lark was called Cassita, or Galerita, (sc. avis), from the crest or tuft on its head. See also Menage in v. Alouette.

To lowe lyvyng men the larke is resembled.
Piers Plouhman, p. 239.

Yet sang the larke, and Palamon right tho
With holy herte, and with an high corage
He rose.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2214.

Then like the larke that past the night
In heauy sleepe with cares opprest:
Yet when shee spies the pleasaunt light,
She sends sweete notes from out hir brest.
Gascoigne. A straunge Passion in a Louer.

Thus wore out night, and now the herald lark
Left his ground-nest, high tow'ring to discry
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

Pride, like an eagle, builds among the stars,
But Pleasure, lark-like, nests upon the ground.
Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

And shrill lark carols clear from her aerial tour.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

LA'RUM. See ALARM. From the It. All' arme, to arms, al arme, larne, larum.

A noisy sound; as if summoning to arms; also applied to a machine or instrument, framed to make a noise at certain hours.

The wailefull warre in time doth yeelde to peace,
The larums lowde and trumpete sounde doth cease.
Turberville. After Misadventures come good Haps.

His larum bell might lowd and wyde be herd,
When cause requyr'd, but never out of time.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Of this nature likewise was the larum mentioned by Walchius, which though it were but two or three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour of the night.—Wilkins. Dædalus, c. 3.

LA'RYNX. Fr. Larynx, laregau; Gr. Λαρυγξ, gula, guttur.

A cartilage forming the protuberance in the anterior part of the neck, vulgarly named the Pomum Adami, Adam's apple.

The exquisite mechanism of the larynx, its variety of muscles, its cartilages, all so exquisitely made for the purpose of respiration, and forming the voice, are very admirable.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 7.

For these seven couple of simple consonants, viz. B P—G K—D T—Z S—Th—V F—J. S H—differ each from its partner, by no variation whatever of articulation; but singly by a certain unnoticed and almost imperceptible motion or compression of or near the larynx; which causes what Wilkins calls "some kind of murmur."

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. c. 6.

LASCIVIOUS. Fr. Lascif; It. and Sp. Lascivo; Lat. Lascivus.
LASCIVIOUSLY. Vossius (Etymol. in v.) suggests various etymologies without giving a preference. Isaac Vossius, an additional one, the Lat. Lacere, to draw, to attract, to allure, or entice. And hence the word might be interpreted,—

Drawing, attracting, alluring, or enticing, (to luxury, wantonness, or lust;) luxurious, wanton, lustful.

Or perhaps from the same source as the Fr. Lasche, loose, (See LASH;) and hence—Lewd, lustful, wanton.

I finde that some of them haue not only bin offensive for sundrie wanton speeches, and lascivious phrases, but further I heare that the same haue bene doubtfully construed, and (therefore) scandalous.—Gascoigne. To the Reuerend Deuines.
VOL. II.

And to the meadows telling wanton tales,
Her crystal limbs lasciviously in pride
(As ravished with the enamour'd gales)
With often turnings casts from side to side.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

The misery of Florimell, the virtuousnes of Belphebe, the lasciviousnes of Hellenora; and many the like.
Spenser. Explanations of his Faerie Queene.

Adam was wholly set upon doing things at randome, according as the various toyings and titillations of the lascivient life of the vehicle suggested to him.
H. More. The Philosophick Cabbala, c. 3. s. 6.

He [the goat] is much more lascivious; and that shortens his life.—Bacon. The History of Life and Death.

But now his [Edgar's] mixture of vice marred all; especially being a vice opposite to all those virtues, which was lasciviousness.—Baker. Chronicle. Of the Saxons.

Men, by letting themselves loose to all manner of wretchedness and debauchery, through the potent and enormous lascivency of the bodily life, quite lose the relish and grateful sense of true goodness and nobility.
Hallywell. Malampr, (1686.) p. 9.

And in their [the Canaanites] other practice, most beastly lasciviousnesses, most bloody violences, oppressions and rapines [were] generally abounding.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 37.

So in the season when lascivious heat
Burns in their veins, two branching-headed stags,
Of all the herd competitors for sway,
Long with entangled horns persist in strife,
Nor yield, nor vanquish.
Glover. The Athenaid, b. ii.

LASH, v. Fr. Lascher; It. Lasciare; LASH, n. Ger. Lassen; A. S. Les-an, to LA'SHING, n. loose. Tooke says, "Lash (Fr. lasche) of a whip, i. e. that part of it which is let loose, let go, cast out, thrown out: the past part. of French lascher." To lash,—

To let loose, to throw out, to cast out; to strike with a lash, or any thing thrown out; with any thing long and flexible; also to tie, bend, or fasten together with a lash; met. to strike, (sc. with censure or satire,) to aim a stroke or blow at.

To lash the Greks to ground was her hertes joy.
The Nine Ladies Worthy. Imputed to Chaucer.

Many a stripe and many a greuous lashe

Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

For he lasheth out scripture in bedelem as fast as they bothe in Almayn.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 287.

— And gan her fresh assayle,
Heaping huge strokes as thicke as showre of hayle,
And lashing dreadfully at every part.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

Which to haue concealed had tended more to the opinion of virtue, than to lash out whatsoever his vnstaied mind afforded.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1397.

How smart a lash that speech doth giue my conscience?
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 1.

Juvenal was wholly employ'd in lashing vices, some of them the most enormous that can be imagined.
Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

The charioteer then whirl'd the lash around,
And swift ascended at one active bound.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xix.

The lash resounds, the coursers spring,
The chariot marks the rolling ring,
And gath'ring clouds, with eager eyes
And shouts, pursue him as he flies.
Whitehead. The Youth and the Philosopher.

Torn from their planks the cracking ring-bolts drew,
And gripes and lashings all asunder flew.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 2.

LASS. From ladde is derived, and formerly was in use, laddesse, now contracted into lass.
Hickes, (in Lye.)

The mony for theyr masses Spent among wanton lasses.—Skelton. Boke of Colin Clout.

And with your piteous layes haue learn'd to breed Compassion in a countrey-lasses hart.
Spenser. Astrophel.

— Thy broomegroues
Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor lounes,
Being lasse-lorne.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

Thus far the sportful Muse with myrtle bound,
Has sung where lovely lasses may be found.
Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love.

— The rural lass
Whom once her virgin modesty and grace,
Her artless manners, and her neat attire,
So dignified, that she was hardly less Than the fair shepherdess of old romance,
Is seen no more.
Couper. Task, b. iv.

LA'SSITUDE. Fr. Lassitude, lasseté; Sp. Lassitud; Lat. Lassitudo, from lassus, contraction of lactus, from lacere, to draw: "Itaque vaccæ lassæ dicuntur cum diu nimis laciuntur," (Vossius.)

Exhaustion of strength or spirits; weariness or fatigue proceeding from exhaustion; generally—weariness or fatigue.

The one is called cruditie, ye other lassitude, which although they be wordes made of Latyne, hauynge none apte Englyshe worde therefore, yet by the defynitions and more ample declaration of them, they shall be vnderstande suffycientely, and from henceforthe vset for Englyshe.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 1.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oile and warm water. The cause is, for that all lassitude is a kind of contusion, and compression of the parts; and bathing, and anointing give a relaxation, or emolition.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 730.

The corporeal instruments of action being strained to a high pitch, or detained in a tone, will soon feel a lassitude, somewhat offensive to nature.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

Cold tremours come, with mighty love of rest,
Convulsive yawnings, lassitude and pains
That sting the burden'd brows, fatigue the loins,
And rack the joints, and every torpid limb.

Accounted dangerous folly.—Id. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 2.

Sir Richard Scrope is deprived of the chancellorshippe which he had gouerned laudably.—Stow. Rich. II. an. 1382.

I have no purpose to enter into a laudative of learning, or to make a hymn to the Muses.
Bacon. Of the Adeancement of Learning, b. i.

My discourse yet shall not be altogether laudatory; but, as Samuel's, led in with exhortation and carried out with threatening.—Bp. Hall. Sermon, March 24, 1613.

Not simply a confutation, but a modest confutation with a laudatory of itself obtruded in the very first word.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnus.

[Saint Austin himself] acknowledges those virtuous dispositions and deeds to be the gift of God, to be laudable, to procure some reward, to avail so far, that they, because of them, shall receive a more tolerable and mild treatment from divine justice.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 40.

Yet, in my opinion, obsolete words may then be laudably revived, when either they are more sounding, or more significant than those in practice.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

But he, whom ev'n in life's last stage Endeavours laudable engage,
Is paid, at least, in peace of mind,
And sense of having well design'd.

for all that heare, will laughe at me.—Bible, 1551. Gen. c. 21.

And when he came vp, he told Maister Bradford (for they both lay in one chamber) that he hadde made the Bishop of London afraid: for (saith he laughingly) his chap-laine gaue him counsaile nat to strike me with his crosier staffe, for that I would strike again; and by my troth (said he rubbing his handes) I made him beleeeue I would do so indeed.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1385. Life & Acts of Dr. Taylor.

I may therefore conclude, that the passion of laughter is nothing else but sudden glory arising from a sudden conception of some eminency in ourselves, by comparison with the infirmity of others, or with our own formerly: for men laugh at the follies of themselves past, when they come suddenly to remembrance, except they bring with them any present dishonour.—Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 9.

Laughing without offence must be at absurdities and infirmities abstracted from persons, and when all the company may laugh together: for laughing to one's self putteth all the rest into jealousy and examining of themselves.—Id. Ib.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will euermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper;
And other of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not shew their teeth in the way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 1.

To make the weeper laugh, the laughter weep,
He had the dialect and different skill.
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Thou pow'r that rul'st the confines of the night, tonge.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 250.

This was a goodly discipline y^t the kinges there had of olde time vsed amongst their subiects, in punishing with losse of life the lauesnes of ye tounge, which is ther more greuously chastised then any other cryme.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 67.

A certayne manne (qh. he) goyng farre from home, called hys seruantes, and deliuered them hys goodes, not to spend them, lauysh them out prodigally for their own pleasure, but to get some aduantage therefore to theyr mayster, of whom they had receyued the stocke.—Udal. Math. c. 25.

Sp. Lavandero, a launder, or washerman.
To launder,—is to lave, to wash.

Envie is lavender of the court alwaie,
For she ne parteth neither night ne day,
Out of the house, of Cesar, thus saith Dant.
Chaucer. Legende of Good Women, Prol.

And this effeminate love of a woman, doth so womanize a man, that, if he yield to it, it will not only make him an Amazon, but a launder, a distaff, a spinner, or whatsoever other vile occupation their idle heads can imagine, and their weak hands perform.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

Oft did she heave her napkin to her eyne,
Which on it had conceited characters,
Laund'ring the silken figures in the brine
That season'd woe had pelleted in tears.

LAY, n. Mr. Tyrwhitt is inclined to believe,
"that the Isl. Liod, Ger. Lied, A. S. Leoth, and
Fr. Lai, are all to be deduced from the same Goth. original." Wachter leads us to this original;
he derives the Ger. Lied from the verb, "Lauten, canere, sonare; Dut. Luiden; Sw. Liuda;" which are themselves from the A. S. Hlyd-an, to make a (loud) noise, to low or bellow, A. S.
Hlowan, from which is also formed hleoth-rian, canere. And leoth (the initial h omitted) is said by Somner to be not only "a verse, a song, a song of rejoicing, an ode or psalm, but a shout or noise;

(though he restricts it (improperly) to the shout or noise) which mariners make when they do any thing together, or when the matter doth call or encourage them." Mariners still retain the same custom, and the noise they make confirms the etymology, viz. hlow-eth, lowth, the third person of the verb hlowan, and whence leoth, a low or lay.

For Mr. Tyrwhitt's definition of the word lay, see the quotation from him: the explanation of Somner is more ample and satisfactory.

And under lynde in a launde. Ienede ich a stounde
To litten here laies. and her loveliche notes.
Piers Plouhman, p. 169.

And in a lettre wrote he all his sorwe,

LA'YING, n. } To put or place; literally and LA'YSTALL. } metaphorically; literally, when a state of rest is intended.

Used with prepositions it is equivalent to the Lat. verb Ponere, to put or place, and its compounds; thus,—

To lay or put down; to deposit; to lay or put upon; to impose; to lay or put out, or before, to expose; to lay or put together; to compose; to lay, put, or place near to; (in apposition;) to put or place in their proper places, to dispose: to put or place up, in store, at rest; to repose.

It has very numerous consequential applications, which may be inferred from the context of the sentence in which they occur.

A layman employed by painters, may be that

LEASOW. } lieth untilld. Gower uses the expression—"the lease, which is plaine;" Verstegan takes Legh, ley, or lea, "to signifie ground that lieth unmanured, and wildly overgrowne." And Skinner says, that a lay or lea of land may perhaps be from the A. S. Lec-gan, ponere, to lay, because in the year we allow it to remain untilld, we lay dunge upon it. And see the quotations from Beaum. & Fletch. and Dryden; who write it lay.
There is, however, in the A. S. the verb Læs-wian, pascere, pabulari, to feed, to foster, or pasture cattle, as is usual on commons; and the noun Læswe, pascuum, feeding ground or pasture, a leese or common. Wiclif uses both verb and noun.
And see Lesuris in Jamieson.

From plain or pasture land it is extended to the plain surface of water. See the first quotation

Turne over the leaf, and chese another tale.
Chaucer. The Milleres Prologue, v. 3237.

Archigallus was thus restored to the kingdome, and learned by due correction that he must turne the leafe, and take out a new lesson, by changing his former trade of liuing into better, if he would reigne in suertie.
Holinshed. The Historie of England, b. ii. c. 7.

Then I no more shall court the verdant bay,
But the dry leafless trunk on Golgotha.
Carew. To Master George Sands.

She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow maidens, now within
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side. Shakespeare. Pericles, Act v. sc. 1.

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe,
Of dumps so dull and heavy,
The fraud of men were euer so,
Since summer first was leafy.
Id. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act ii. sc. 3.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates, and the gates shall not be shut.
Bible. Modern Version. Isaiah, xxiv. 1.

For most trees do begin to sprout in the fall of the leaf or autumn, and if not kept back by cold and outward causes, would leaf about the solstice.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

Like leaves on trees the race of man is found,
Now green in youth, now withering on the ground;
Another race the following Spring supplies;
They fall successive, and successive rise.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

Stow. Q. Elizabeth, an. 1590.

In me affianc'd, fortify thy breast,
Though myriads leagu'd thy rightful claim contest.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

— Whose only aim
Is to preserve their Country; who oppose,
In honour leagu'd, none but their Country's foes.
Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

LEAGUE, n. Fr. Lieue; It. Lega; Sp. Legua; Lat. Leuca. The most ancient instance of the Lat. word, which Vossius had met with, is in the original of the passage quoted from Ammianus. The true reading of the word is uncertain. Spelman writes it leuca, leuga, leuica, and lega; the etymology is unknown. (See Vossius, de Vit. lib. ii. c. 11, and lib. iii. c. 12.) Also Spelman, in v. Leuca, and Menage, in v. Lieue.

The storme was so hedeouse, that in lasse than a day they were driuen a hundred leagues fro the place wher they were before.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 81.

From the place whence the Romanes advaunced their standers unto the barbarians fort, it was fourteene leagues, that is to say, one and twentie miles.

Holland. Ammianus, p. 69.

That some few leagues should make this change,
To man unlearn'd seems mighty strange.

Prior. Alma, c. 2.

Some traverse many a league of country o'er,
And some review their native seats no more.

It admits then of a conjecture that to learn may mean, to gather or take up; (take or teach, qv. and see BETECHÉ.)

To learn, is (by modern usage) only—

To take to ourselves, (sc.) the knowledge of any thing; formerly also, to take it to another, to deliver, impart, or communicate it; to teach.

To take, accept, or receive (knowledge); to acquire or obtain, gain or procure it.

And so heo schulde lerne, with Christenemen to fygte.
R. Gloucester, p. 153.

Take ye my yok on you, and lerne ye of me, for I am mylde and meke in herte.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 11.

Take my yocke on you, and learn of me, for I am meke and lowly in herte.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Lerneth to suffren, or so mote I gon,

Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing, all my mind was set Serious to learn, and know, and thence to do What might be publick good.—Milton. Par. Reg. b. i.

And yet doth his majesty [King James] distinguish it [magick] from necromancy, witchcraft, and the rest: of all which he hath written largely and most learnedly.

Ralegh. History of the World, b. i. c. 11. s. 2.

For it is true, the late learners cannot so well take the plie; except it be in some mindes, that have not suffered themselves to fix, but have kept themselves open and prepared, to receive continual amendments,—which is exceeding rare.—Bacon. Ess. Of Custome.

The parts of human learning have reference to the three parts of man's understanding which is the seat of learning; history to his memory, poesy to his imagination, and philosophy to his reason.—Id. Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

Thus then to man the voice of Nature spake, Go, from the creatures thy instructions take:
Learn from the birds what food their thickets yield,
Learn from the beasts the physic of the field,
Thy arts of building from the bee receive:
Learn from the mole to plough, the worm to weave.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 3.

And seem more learnedish than those
That in a greater charge compose.
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

Whether, retiring from your weighty charge,
On some high theme you learnedly enlarge.
Swift. Epistle to Lord Carteret.

Stern, rugged nurse; thy rigid lore
With patience many a year she bore:
What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.
Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

Men that, if now alive, would sit content
And humble learners of a Saviour's worth, Preach it who might. Cowper. The Task, b. ii.

LEASE, v. } Skinner says, "To leas corn, LE/ASER, n. } from the Dut. and Ger. Les-en, collegere, legere, carpere, to collect, to gather." The word is Goth. and A.S. Lis-an, les-an; and the application, probably, consequential:

To gather or pick up, to collect, to glean, (sc.) that which is loose or scattered.

Agree, that in harvest used to lease:
But harvest done to chair work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and two pence was her daily hire.
Dryden. Theocritus, Idyl. 3.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners.—Swift.

VOL. II.

A deed or instrument by which any lands or tenements are let, or demised, or the occupation of them granted to another. Applied (met.) as in Donne and Dryden, to any time or term granted.

Lessor, lessee, &c. are common legal terms.

— And those not by chance
Made, or indenture, or leas'd out t'advance
The profits for a time.

B. Jonson. To the Memory of Sir Lucius Cary.

This land of such deere soules, this deere deere land,
Deere for her reputation through the world,
Is now leas'd out (I dye pronouncing it)
Like to a tenement or pelted farme.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

And as it seemes and is most probable the benchers of this colledge [Lincolne's Inne] tooke an estate of long time by lease, soone after the death of the Earle of Lincolne.

Stow. Of the Vniuersities in England, c. 14.

I could begin again to court and praise,
And in that pleasure lengthen the short days
Of my life's lease.—Donne. The Expostulation.

They were all very sudainly inhabited, and stored with inmates, to the great admiration of the English nation, and aduantage of landlords and leasemongers.

Stow. King James, an. 1604.

An infant Phenix from the former springs,
His father's heir, and from his tender wings
Shakes off his parent dust, his method he pursues,
And the same lease of life on the same term renews.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

The lands in America and the West Indies, indeed, are in general not tenanted nor leased out to farmers.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

In the Venetian territory, all the arable lands which are given in lease to farmers are taxed at a tenth of the rent.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 2.

LEASH, v. } Fr. Lesse; It. Lassa. "A leash LEASH, n. } to hold a dog, &c. in; a bridle, or false rein to hold an horse by; any such long string," (Cotgrave.)

To leash dogs together is to tie or fasten them together with a leash, or lash. See LASH.

Leash, n. is applied to the number (3) usually leashed together.

Now it is behouely to tellen whiche ben dedly sinnes, that it is to say, chieftaines, for as moche as all they run in a leas, but in diuers maners.—Chaucer. Persones Tale.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself

Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

The struggling greyhound gnaws his leash in vain;
If, when 'tis broken, still he drags the chain.

Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

LE/ASIE. This word has been found only in Ascham, and seems to be used by him as equivalent to vague; and may be intended as a derivative (with leasing, qv.) from A. S. Lease, mendax, fallax; fallacious.

For studying therebie to make everie thing straight and easie, in smoothing and playning all things to much, never leaveth, whiles the sense itselfe be left both lowse and leasie.

Ascham. The Schole-master, b. ii.

LE/ASING. } A. S. Leas, lease; falsus,
LE/ASING-MONGERS. } mendax, lying, false. Leasunge,—a lye, a falsehood. Skinner thinks leasing to have the same origin as losenger, (qv.) and losenger is derived by Junius from lose or loos, laus. (See LOS.) The A. S. verb Hlys-an, which Somner interprets—celebrare, illustrare, gives the noun hlis-a, fama, relatio, rumor, fame, report, rumour. Whence A. S. Leas, leas-unge; and Eng. Leas-ing. Lying rumour, false report; lying, falsehood.

"Lat him enchantors," quoth Merlyn, "sone bi for me brynge, Lef-wa, vivere, linquere. So these words are explained; but without any attempt to account for usages so different:—Live, leve, leave, (see LEVE, and BELIEVE), seem to be the same word:—the radical meaning—to stay or remain: thus—

To live,—to stay, to dwell, to remain, to abide; to cause to dwell, or abide; to let, suffer, permit, concede, or allow (any thing) to stay, abide or remain; to omit, to desist, to recede, to relinquish, to resign; to quit, to retire, to forsake, to depart from. (See LEFT.) And the n.—

Permission, concession, sufferance. Also—Departure: and further;—certain formalities on or previous to departure.

Id. William Rufus, an. 1099.

Some persons opened their mouthes against me, both obliquely in the pulpit, and directly at the court, complaining of my too much indulgence to persons disaffected, and my too much liberty of frequent lecturings within my charge.
Bp. Hall. Some Specialities in his Life.

In the year 1704, he [Clarke] was called forth to an office, worthy of such an undertaking, it was to preach Mr. Boyle's Lecture, founded by that honourable gentleman, to assert and vindicate the great fundamentals of natural and revealed religion.—Clarke. Life, by Hoadley.

He [Tillotson] soon became lecturer at St. Laurence Jury, which he continued till his advancement to the see of Canterbury.—Tillotson. Life, by Birch.

The Lectionary contained all the lessons, which were directed to be read in the course of the year.
Warton. Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 337.

If the teacher happens to be a man of sense, it must be an unpleasant thing to him to be conscious, while he is lecturing his students, that he is either speaking or reading nonsense, or what is very little better than nonsense.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

I was informed by an acquaintance, that a certain clergyman in the city was about to resign his lectureship, and that he would probably resign in my favour, if I were early enough in my application.—Knox. Essays, No. 117.

LE'DEN. A. S. Læd-en, leden. Tyrwhitt adopts the opinion of Skinner, that leden is a corruption of Latin; and produces from Dante an instance of a similar usage of latino. Lye supplies many instances of the A. S. used as an adjective. "Of bec ledene on Englisc wende, he rendered it from a Latin book into an English one;" and others in which ledene is opposed to English. There appears no reason to travel further for the origin of the word. See (however) Jamieson in v. Leed. Leden, it may be added, is applied to the Latin or Roman people, as well as to the language. See Lye, and the Gloss. to G. Douglas. It is used, generally, to denote—
The language, or the peculiar language.

— The queinte ring,
Thurgh which she understood wel every thing
That any foule may in his leden sain,
And coude answer him in his leden again,
Hath understonden what this fauon seyde.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,749.

Thereto he was expert in prophesies,
And could the ledde of the Gods unfold.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

The ledde of the birds most perfectly she knew.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 12.

LEDGE. From the A. S. Lec-gan, ponere, to lay. A narrow board upon which we are wont to lay small things, (Skinner.)

That upon which we lay any thing; a narrow shelf; any thing prominent or projecting, in manner of such shelf, from the main surface; a ridge, a row.

Ye sydes were as it were flat borders between the ledges.
Bible, 1551. 3 Kings, c. 8.

Then that the lowest ledge or row be meerly of stone, and the broader the better.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 18.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his feet he hides;

to the wind; to be under the lee is to be under the wind or shelter from it; the lee-shore, on the contrary, appears to be the shore on, or opposed to, the lee-side of the ship, as she sails along; and consequently exposed to the wind. In Dutch, De loef hebben, to sail before the wind; Loeven, to ply to windward, (to luff;) Loef, the weather-gage. The Dut. and the Eng. Luff, lee, leeward, Tooke considers to be from the same root; the A. S. Lyft; the air or the clouds; the wind. See LOOF, and LUFF.

— As sea-men tell,

Thus they generally reason; Barbadoes is the Easter-most of the Caribbe Islands, therefore the rest are said to be leeward of it, and so of any other island; as indeed it usually holds true, because the winds there are commonly at East.
Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 2.

Which just like ours, how rigg'd and mann'd,
And got about a league from land
By change of wind to leeward side,
The pilot knew not how to guide.—Swift. On the Union.

Our hull unbroken long may try a lee.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 2.

Then might I with unrivall'd straines, deplore
Th' impervious horrors of a leeward shore.—Id. Ib. c. 3.

LEECH, v. } A. S. Læce, from Lacn-ian, læcn- LEECH, n. } ian, curare, mederi, sanari, to cure, to heal. The Dut. Laeche, hirudo, a horse leech, is derived by Kilian from Laecken, to lack or want; because it occasions a lack of blood, or from Lacus, because found in lakes or standing waters. It is probably the same word, (A. S.
Læce), and so applied, because the animal heals by withdrawing unwholesome blood.

To cure, to heal; to practise the art of healing,
the medicinal art.

Hys lechys loked hys stat, as her rygt was to done.

LEER, v. } A. S. Hleare, hleor, maxilla, LEER, n. } mandibula, the cheek, the jaw;
LE'ERING, n. } it. facies, frons, vultus, the face,
the countenance, (Somner.) Hence, says Lye, our Leer, lour; lour, or lowere, from the Dut. Loeren, Ger. Lauren, retortis et limis oculis intueri, to look upon with eyes thrown back or askance, (Skinner;) but see LOUR.

Lere, in Chaucer, is explained by Mr. Tyrwhitt to intend—the skin. In Holland, it is applied to the general colour, complexion, or appearance.
To leer may be—

To look with the eye or eye-lid, somewhat down-cast, or lowering; as if to attract or invite attention or favour; and, thus, to assume or put on an alluring look; to allure, to attract, by the looks.

LEER. A. S. Ge-lær; Ger. Lær, vacans, iners, which Wachter derives from lieren, perdere, omit-tere, and this by a common change of s into r, from lies-en, to lose. And, thus,—

A leer drunkard, will be a loose drunkard, a dissolute, profligate drunkard; "The horse runs lere,"
i. e. loose, away. A leer stomach may be, conse-quentially, an empty stomach; because loose, slack, not well filled out. See Gifford on the passage quoted from Jonson, and Nares, in v.

Love. Laugh on, sir, I'll to bed and sleep.
And dream away the vapour of love, if the house
And your leer drunkards let me.

LEET, n. Spelman rejects the A. S. Lath, from Lath-ian, ge-lathian, congregare, q. d. the assembly or assize, because equally applicable to any other court, which seems scarcely a sufficient reason; priority of appropriation might decide the distinction. He further suggests let, pars, parvus, or lat, censura, arbitrium. See his Gloss. in v. Leta.

M. Lambert seemeth to be of the opinion, that the leets of our time doo yeeld some shadow of the politike institution of Alfred.—Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 4.

The jurisdiction of these leets is either remaining in the king, and in that case exercised by the sheriff in his turn, which is the grand leet, or granted over to subjects, but yet it is still the king's court.—Bacon. The Office of Constable.

The other general business of the leet and tourn was to present by jury all crimes whatsoever that happened within their jurisdiction; and not only to present, but also to punish, all trivial misdemeanors.

Id. E. Philips, To the Reader.

The first and fundamental positive law of all commonwealths, is the establishing of the legislative power; as the first and fundamental natural law, which is to govern even the legislative itself, is the preservation of the society, and (as far as it will consist with the public good) of every person in it.—Locke. Of Civil Government, c. 11.

The power of the legislative being derived from the people by a positive voluntary grant and institution, can be no other than what that positive grant conveyed, which being only to make laws and not to make legislators, the legislative can have no power to transfer their authority of making laws, and place it in other hands.—Id. Ib.

See what that country of the mind will produce, when by the wholesome laws of this legislatress it has obtained its liberty.—Shaftesbury. Moral. pt. iv. s. 2.

But there is nevertheless a science of legislation, which the details of office, and the intrigues of popular assemblies, will never communicate; a science, of which the principles must be sought for in the constitution of human nature, and in the general laws which regulate the course of human affairs.—Stewart. Of the Human Mind, Intro. pt. ii. s. 2.

The supreme legislative power of England was lodged in the King and great council, or what was afterwards called the parliament.—Hume. History of England, vol. ii. App. 2.

In the legislature, the people are a check on the nobility, and the nobility a check upon the people; by mutual privilege of rejecting what the other had resolved, while the King is a check upon both, which preserves the executive power from encroachments.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

LE'NTEN. } Leneten, lengten, ver, the spring.
Minshew says, from Ger. Glentz; and Camden,— that our ancestors, the Germans, used glent for spring. Wachter notices no such word; but in v.
Lenz, (from which (with the common prefix ge-) glentz might be formed,) he enumerates four different etymologies: 1st, from length, because at the season of spring the days lengthen; 2dly, from lenitas, because then the air becomes mild or lenient; 3dly, glentzen, to shine or glisten, because it is the most brilliant or beautiful season; 4thly, from the Dut. Lenten, to dissolve, because the severity of winter is then dissolved.

As Lent is or was a season of fasting, lenten is abstemious, sparing.

LERE, n. See LEER.

LESS, or

LE'SSEN, v.

LESS, adj.

LE'SSER.

LE'SSNESS.

LEST, or

LEAST.

Also anciently written lass, and liss. (See TO LOSE, and TO LEASE.) A. S. Les-an, leos-an, lys-an, alysan, (see ELSE), sol-vere, dimittere, remittere, liberare; to loose, to dismiss or put away, to free or discharge; to dismiss or put away, (sc.) part; and, consequentially—

LES

To diminish, to decrease, to reduce.

Lest,—(see the quotation from Gower) and least (see the quotation from Bale's Votaries) are used as the regular past tense, contracted from les-ed or leas-ed, of the A. S. verb Les-an; and whether used as adjective or conjunction, are considered by Tooke to be this same past tense or past part.
and, with the article that (either expressed or understood,) mean no more than—hoc dimisso or quo dimisso. He produces two instances of the improper use of them, there being nothing expressed or understood in either sentence, quo dimisso, something else would follow.

Less.—Our ancestors the A. S. instead of eighteen, nineteen, said, An las twentig, twa las twentig; i. e. twenty dismiss (or take away) (he should perhaps rather have said withhold) one, two, &c. We also say, He demanded twenty, I gave him two less, i. e. I gave him twenty, dismiss two: and in every use of less or least, the signification of dismissing, separating, or taking away, (again add, of withholding) is conveyed. Les, then,
he pronounces to be the imperative of the same
A. S. verb, Les-an, and to signify—dimitte or hoc dimisso, dismiss this, or this being dismissed. It is sometimes used for unless, (qv.) In confirmation, he remarks, that the Gr. Εἰ μὴ, the Lat.
Nisi, (ne sit,) It. Se non, Sp. Si no, Fr. Si non, all mean,—be it not.

Though Tooke may be right in his etymology, (and indeed he appears to have fully established that he is so,) his mode of interpretation will not immediately suit in all cases,—as that cannot be with propriety said to be dismissed, separated, or taken away, which was never united to, or possessed by, that from which it shall be so said to be dismissed, &c.; the word with-held may supply the deficiency; or a consequential usage must be introduced, e. g.—

Goldsmith was less in size than Johnson. As he never was equal, it was not by the privation, loss, or taking away of bulk once possessed that he became less or minor; it was by the absence or negation of that, which had been withheld in his formation; or by a consequential usage, (from instances where a minority or inferiority had been produced by an act of taking away, &c. to instances where that minority or inferiority existed without such act,) less became employed to denote imme- diately an inferiority or minority, whether resulting from privation or negation. The like may be said of the adjective least. As now used—

To less or lessen, is to diminish, to decrease; to cause to be smaller or more minute; to lower, to degrade, to impair, to weaken.

LE/VEL, n. } It. Livello; Lat. Libella, dim.
LE/VEL, adj. } of Libra, from Librare, to even.
LE/VELLY. } To even, to plane, to flatten, LE/VELLER. } to bring to a smooth, equal, or LE/VELNESS. } uniform surface, without asperities or roughness, without inclination or leaning; to equalize; to square with; to place in, to bring to, the same line, (sc.) as another object, an object aimed at; and, hence,—

To aim at, to endeavour to hit.
—And contrivede the compas
And cast out by squire. bothe lyne and levell.
Piers Ploughman, p. 190.

For all his minde on honour fixed is,
To which he levels all his purposis.
Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Bertram de Gordon, standing on the castle wall, levell'd
a quarrel out of a crosbow, and smote him with a venomed dart in the left arme or shoulder.—Stow. Rich. I. an. 1197.

As for the rule and square, the levell, the turner's instrument and key, Theodorus Samius devised them.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

Which might perhaps advance their minds so far,
Above the level of subjection, as T' assume to them the glory of that war.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

And only level lies upon the rise and set.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 16.

Neither would praises and actions appear so levelly concurrent in many other of the Grecians, as they do in these.
Hobbs. Thucydides, b. ii.

They were termed levellers upon a pretended principle which they espoused, to endeavour to obtain such an equal righteous distribution of justice in government to all degrees of people, that it should not be in the power of the highest to oppress their inferiors, nor should the meanest of the people be out of capacity to arrive at the greatest office and dignity in the state.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1649.

The hero levell'd in his humble grave,
With other men, was now nor great nor brave.
Otway. Windsor Castle.

These, lightly skimming, when they swept the plain,
Nor ply'd the grass nor bent the tender grain;
And when along the level seas they flew,
Scarce on the surface curl'd the briny dew.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

The river Tiber is expressed lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth.—Peacham. On Drawing.

While oaths divine the willing nations bound,
Ne'er to return, till our victorious pow'rs
Had level'd with the dust the Theban tow'rs.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. i.

For want of some standard of this sort, we frequently see an author's taste in writing alter much to the worse in the course of his life; and his later productions fall below the level of his early essays.
Stewart. Of the Human Mind, c. 5. pt. ii. s. 2.

The setting sun now beams more mildly bright,
The shadows lengthening with the level light.
Beattie, Past. 2.

LEV'EN. } Lye acquiesces in the opinion
LEV'ENING. } of the editor of G. Douglas, that Levin is from the A. S. Hlif-ian, rutilare, as he explains it; but Hlif-ian is the English, to lift, to raise aloft, to be conspicuous; and, consequently, bright or brilliant. And see Jamieson.
Light, or lightning.

The stones were of Rynes, the noyse drefulle and grete,
It affrayed the Sarizins, as leuen the fire out schete.
R. Brunne, p. 174.

With wilde thonder dint and fry leuen,
Mote thy welked nekke be to-broke.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5858.

Sins that the fire of gods and king of men
Strake me with thonder, and with leauening blast.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

As when the flashing levin haps to light

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

LEV'ER. Fr. Levier, from the verb Lever; Lat. Levare, to raise or lift up.

Eldol, erl of Gloucestre, that a strong knygt was,
Hente a strong leuour, that hym a corn at honde bi cas.
R. Gloucester, p. 126.

They had great leuers in their handis, the whiche they founde in a carpenter's yarde, with the whiche they gaue such strokis that men durst not aproche to them.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 16.

The second mechanical faculty is the lever: the first invention of it is usually ascribed to Neptune, and represented by his trident, which in the Greek are both called by one name, and are not very unlike in form, being both of them somewhat broader at one end than in the other parts.
Wilkins. Archimedes, c. 4.

Rous'd from repose, aloft the sailors swarm,
And with their levers soon the windlass arm
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

LEV'ERET. Fr. Lievret, levereteau, dim. of Lievre. It. Lepre, lepreto; Sp. Liebre, liebrezilla; Lat. Lepus, a hare.
A young hare.

Pair hand! that can on virgin-paper write,
Yet from the stain of ink preserve it white;
Whose travel o'er the silver field does show,
Like track of leverets in morning snow.
Waller. Of a Tree cut in Paper.

The children of a neighbour of mine had a leveret given to them for a plaything; it was at that time about three months old.—Cowper. Treatment of his Hares.

LEV'ESEL. Skinner writes it Levesell, or Lessel, umbraculum, from the Fr. Lais, trees or bushes, with the addition of the dim. term. ell. Tyrwhitt (in his note) says it is plainly derived from the Saxon Lefe, folium, and setl, sedes; and it signifies—

A leafy seat, an harbour. In his Glossary, he declares himself by no means satisfied with his own explanation. Levesel may be opposed to Groundsel, (qv.) or Ground-post; or mean some kind of sell or syll, (perhaps raised, Fr. Lever, to raise,) as distinct from that fixed in the ground.

LEV

He loketh up and down, til he hath found
The clerkes hors, that as he stood ybound,
Behind the mille, under a levesell.
Chaucer. The Reeves Tale, v. 4059.

The gay levesell at the tauerne is signe of the win that is in celler.—Id. The Persones Tale.

LEV'ET. Butler probably intended to form this word from the Fr. Lever, to raise; to rouse, and, consequentially, to animate.
A rousing, animating blast.

First, he that led the cavalcate,
Wore a sow-gelder's flagellate,
On which he blew as strong a level,
As well-feed lawyer on his breviate.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

LEVI'ATHAN, n. The word is Hebrew; the Septuagint renders it Δρακων, a dragon, and κητος, a whale.

—There leviathan, Hugest of living creatures, on the deep
Stretch'd like a promontory sleeps or swimmes,
And seems a moving land; and at his gilles
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans t'attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

LEV'IGATE, v. } Lat. Levigare, from LEV'IGATE, adj. } Levis, (pro glabro politoque,) smooth, and polished. Gr. Λεϊος, (Vossius.)
To smoothen, to polish; to bring or reduce to a state of smoothness.

Wherby his labours being leuigate, and made more toller-able, he shal gouverne with the better aduysse.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 2.

New objects with a gentle and grateful touch warble upon the corporeal organs, or excite the spirits into a pleasant frisk of motion; but when use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easie that the spirits pass without any stop, those objects are no longer felt, or very faintly; so that the pleasure ceaseth.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

The chyle is white, as consisting of salt, oil, and water, much levigated, or smooth.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments.

LEVITICAL. } Of or pertaining to the LEVITICALLY. } Levites, or tribe of Levi; to the priesthood, which, among the Jews, belonged to that tribe.

Saint Augustine saith, the Christians do keep it spiritually; so that if tythe be not given in the tenth, according to the Levitical institution, yet the spiritual meaning of providing for the clergy, our Levites, remaineth.
Sir H. Spelman. On the Rights of the Church, c. 26.

What right of jurisdiction soever can be from this place (17th Deut.) levitically bequeath'd must descend upon the ministers of the gospel equally, as it finds them in all other points equal.—Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i.

LEV'ITY. } It. Levità; Sp. Levedad; Lat.
LEVITA'TION. } Levitas; from levis, light, which Vossius thinks is from Gr. Λεϊς, cortex, qui levis-simus. See LEVY.

Lightness; (met.) fickleness, changeableness; instability or unsteadiness, inconstancy; frivolity, opposed both lit. and met. to gravity.

But where the bodies are of such several levities, and gravity, as they mingle not, there can follow no imbibition.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 865.

Levity, whereby, what we call light bodies swim; a thing no less useful in the world than its opposite, gravity, is in many respects, to divers tribes of animals, but particularly serviceable to the rising up of vapours, and to their conveyance about the world.—Derham. Physico-Theol. b. i. c. 5.

So swiftly mov'd their feet, they might with ease,
Scarce moisten'd, skim along the glassy seas,
Or with a wondrous levity be borne O'er yellow harvests of unbending corn.
Eusden. Ovid. Met. b. x.

Letters got abroad, which the author was ashamed of as very trivial things, full not only of levities, but of wrong judgments of men and books, and only excusable from the youth and inexperience of the writer.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii. Note.

The lungs also of birds, as compared with the lungs of quadrupeds, contain in them a provision, distinguishingly calculated for the same purpose of levitation.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12. s. 4.

LEW

The vices of levity are always ruinous to the common people, and a single week's thoughtlessness and dissipation is often sufficient to undo a poor workman for ever.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

LEV'VABLE. } See LEVITY.
LEV'VING, n. } To raise, to lift up, to lift off, (to bear off, to carry away,) to collect or gather.

To levy an army, is a common expression; to levy a siege (Holinshed) is not so, though correct. Spenser writes—leaved.

Leuyenge vnreasonable taxes and trybutes on the temperalte.
R. Brunne, p. 89. Note.

And after all an army strong she leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realme bereav'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

The duke is straight advised to retire
Into the bounds of Wales, to levy aid.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

In his returne from thence he [Karanach] was incountred by Agricola himselfe, who being certified of this attempt of his enemies, had leuied his siege, and was comming towards them.—Holinshed. The Historie of Scotland.

Surely all Æol's huffing brood

Which seem surpris'd, and have not yet
Had time his levies to complete. Colton. Winter.

Another law for the benevolence, to make the sums which any had agreed to pay, and were not brought in, to be leviable by course of law.—Baker. Hen. VII. an. 1508.

Not to speake of their infamous levaying of fowlers mustered within the provinces, and whole bands of hunters marching vnder severall colours.
Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. c. 7. s. 7.

With that writ were sent to each sheriff instructions, that, instead of a ship, he should levy upon his county such a sum of money, and return the same to the Treasurer of the Navy for his Majesty's use, with direction, in what manner he should proceed against such as refused: and from hence that tax had the denomination of ship-money; a word of lasting sound in the memory of this kingdom.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 68.

Yet the thought of a war, which wise men saw actually levied upon the king already, was much abhorr'd, and men were credulous of every expedient which was pretended for peace.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 693.

In all the different countries of Europe then, in the same manner as in several of the Tartar governments of Asia at present, taxes used to be levied upon the persons and goods of travellers, when they passed through certain manors, when they went over certain bridges, when they carried about their goods from place to place in a fair, when they erected in it a booth or stall to sell them in.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iii. c. 3.

The levying of the first fruits was also a new device begun in this reign, by which his holyness thrust his fingers very frequently into the purses of the faithful; and the king seems to have unwarily given way to it.
Hume. History of England. Edw. I. an. 1307.

LEV'YING. See LEAVING.

LEW. } A. S. Hluc, hleow, from the verb
Low, v. } Hleowan, tepere, fovere, to warm.
(See LUKEWARM.) Gower uses the verb to Low; and both verb and noun are common in Scotch. See Jamieson.
Warm, tepid.

But for thou art lewe, and neither could neither hoot, I schal bigynne to caste the out of my mouthe.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 3.

Somner says,—Lawede, lawed-man; Laicus, a laick, layman. And see the first quotation from Robert of Gloucester.

Lewd means—misled, led astray, deluded, imposed upon, betrayed into error, and thus is almost equivalent to wicked, i. e. beguiled. In its modern application it is confined to those who are betrayed or misled by one particular passion; (sc.) lust, or lechery.

Deluded, ignorant, illiterate; wicked, lustful, lecherous.

Then he aduanced the murthurer of Vocula to a higher place, and the rest he rewarded, ech according to the lewede seruice they did.—Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 169.

Love, my lewede pilott, hath a restlesse minde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

The breaking of an oth, in a case that may preiudice, procureth greuous punishments from God against them that so lewedlie doo offend.—Holinshead. Hen. II. an. 1155.

Yet leudly dar'st our ministring upbraid.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

For oft their lewednes blotteth good deserts with blame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

Howbeit, and notwithstanding all these his manifold lewednes, such was the follie of his Egyptians (where he first reigned and taught) that whilst he liued they alone had him in great estimation.—Holinshead. Desc. of Britaine, c. 9.

Mist. Ford. Against such lewdesters and their lechery
Those that betray them, do no treachery.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 3.

Whatsoever is light and frothy, and much more whatever is lewede and filthy, ought to be banished from the conversation of Christians.—Tillotson, vol. iii. Ser. 160.

The last offence which I shall mention, more immediately against religion and morality, and cognizable by the temporal courts, is that of open and notorious lewedness; either by frequenting houses of ill-fame, which is an indictable offence, or by some grossly scandalous and public indecency for which the punishment is by fine and imprisonment.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 4.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 511.

Upon which general state of men (so implicated in guilt, so lyable to wrath) is consequent a necessity either of condemnation and punishment, or of mercy and pardon.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

Now let it be considered what this brings the noble principle of human liberty to, particularly when it is possessed and enjoyed in its perfection, viz. a full and perfect freedom and liableness to act altogether at random.

Edwards. On the Will, pt. ii. s. 13.

In Geometry we are not liable to adopt the same paradoxical conclusions as in Algebra; because the diagrams to which our attention is directed, serve as a continual check on our reasoning powers.

Stewart. Of the Human Mind, c. 4. s. 2.

LIARD. Low Lat. Liardus, the colour of a horse, gris pommelé, nostris; Leardo, Italis, (Du Cange.) And Menage forms it from the Gr. Λευκος, white. (See Liart, in Jamieson.) The word may be from the A. S. Leaht-rian, vitiare. A. S. Leahter is applied to the (white) scurf or scales of the head, (Somner.)

He alyghte anon of lyarde. and ledde hym in hus hondes.

LIBBARD. See LEOPARD.

LIBBET. Grose says that in Kent a libbet is a great cudgel, used to knock down fruit from the trees, and throw at cocks. Mr. Nares says it is a stick or staff. It is probably (from lib, to cut,)—
A cutting or piece cut; a slice, a slip, a strip.

A beesome of byrche, for babes very feete,
A long lasting libbet, for loubbers most meete.

Caveat for Common Cursitors, Act iv. sc. 6.

But commonly it fares with men in this case, as with one who looks onely vpon some libbet, or end of a peece of Arras, he happily conceives an hand or head which he sees, to be very vnartificially made.—Hakewill. Apologie, Pref.

The rest, that made either additions or corrections, [to the laws,] were commended to all posterity for men of no less virtue, and no less liberally beneficial to their countries, than the greatest and most prosperous conquerors that ever governed them.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 4. s. 3.

ii. So from the liberty, we descend to the prerogative: Christ's liberation. Here is the glorious prerogative of the Son of God, to be the deliverer or redeemer of his people.

Bp. Hall. Ser. Christian Liberty laid forth.

When complaints are freely heard, deeply consider'd, and speedily reform'd, then is the utmost bound of civil liberty attain'd, that wise men look for.

Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

By virtue of an act granted out of the senat, the libertines (i. the sonnes of freed-men) were enrolled into the foure tribes of the citie.—Holland. Livies, p. 1210.

What is this, but to baffle and affront that sacred power, which is entrusted to government; and to profess ourselves, not libertines, but licentiates of disorder?

Bp. Hall. Ser. Christian Liberty laid forth.

If his private condition represented him a kind of libertine, he assumed, together with the publick person, a more grave and circumspect behaviour.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1659.

[He would] have continued a slave in Aegypt, rather than thus be circumcised in Canaan, have been bored through the ear by his old master, rather than thus dignified with the title of freeman, and denied the libertinism that belongs to it.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 486.

Yea, what speak I of divinity? Even modest Heathens would hiss this libertinisme off the stage.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. c. 2.

A writ of error, not of libertism, that those two principal leaders of reformation may not now come to be sued in a bill of licence, to the scandal of our Church.

Milton. Judgement of Martin Bucer concerning Divorce.

Let them find by experience, that the most liberal has always most plenty, with esteem and commendation to boot, and they will quickly learn to practise it.

Locke. Of Education, s. 110.

The decency then that is to be observed in liberality, seems to consist in its being performed with such cheerfulness, as may express the godlike pleasure that is to be met with in obliging one's fellow-creatures.—Spectator, No. 292.

Neither am I ignorant, but I may justly be condemned for many of those faults of which I have too liberally arraigned them.—Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xii.

So that the idea of liberty is the idea of a power in any agent to do or forbear any particular action, according to the determination or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other.

Locke. Of Humane Understanding, b. ii. c. 21. s. 8.

The natural liberty of man, is to be free from any superior power on earth, and not to be under the will or legislative authority of man, but to have only the law of Nature for his rule. . . . The liberty of man in society, is to be under no other legislative power, but that established by consent, in the commonwealth; nor under the dominion of any will or restraint of any law, but what that legislative shall enact according to the trust put in it.

Id. Of Government, b. ii. c. 4. s. 22.

After the same manner of speaking, Saint Paul styles the liberality of the Macedonian Churches to the poor, "the grace of God bestowed upon them;" and to persuade the Corinthians to do the like, he says, "Therefore as ye abound in every thing, in faith, in utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, see that ye abound in this grace also;" the grace of liberality and charity.

Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. 1.

Grand swelling sentiments of liberty, I am sure I do not despise. They warm the heart; they enlarge and liberalize our minds; they animate our courage in a time of conflict.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

That the public revenue of Great Britain can never be completely liberated, or even that any considerable progress can ever be made towards that liberation, while the surplus of that revenue, or what is over and above defraying the annual expense of the peace establishment, is so very small, it seems altogether in vain to expect.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

Faber was very learned and very ingenious: but I know not how, he often affected to write like a debauchè and a libertine.—Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. 6.

Erasmus observed the growth of this folly with the greater concern, as he thought he saw, under all their fondness for the language of old Rome, a growing libertinage, which disposed them to think lightly of the Christian faith.

Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 13.

Habits of libertinism incapacitate and indispose the mind for all intellectual, moral, and religious pleasures, which is a great loss to any man's happiness.

Paley. Philosophy, pt. iii. b. iii. c. 2.

sexual intercourse.

Lustful, lecherous.

This may well seeme to be brought vpon the king as a plague of his incontinent, vnchast and libidinous life.

Holinshed. Hen. II. an. 1173.

Simon Magus, and his mystical priests, lived libidinosly; and used all manner of incentives and allurements to venery.

Bp. Lavington. Moravians compared, p. 104.

Nero, being monstrous incontinent himself, verily believed that all men were most foul libidinists, yea, that there was not a chaste person in all the world.

Junius. Sin Stigmatized, p. 350. (1639.)

But ah this fertile glebe, this fair domain,
Had well nigh ceded to the slothful hands
Of monks libidinous.—Shenstone. The Ruined Abbey.

LIBRARY. } Fr. Librairie; It. Libreria; Sp.
LIBRARIAN. } Libreria; Lat. Libraria; a room, apartment, or store-house for books, (Libri.)
Liber, the bark of a tree, is applied to books, because men used to write "on the rinds and barkes of trees." (Pliny, lib. xiii. c. 11.)

Is this the librarie that thou haddest chosen for a right certain siege (sedem;) to thee in mine hous there as thou disputest oft with me, of the science of thynges touchyng diuinite, and touchyng mankynde.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

This invention of erecting libraries, especially here at Rome, came from Asinius Pollio, who by dedicating his bibliothèque, containing all the books that ever were written, was the first that made the wits and works of learned men a publicke matter and a benefit to a commonwealth.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 2.

13. A library-keeper, who is likewise to be an apothecary, druggist, and keeper of instruments, engines, &c.

Cowley. The Advancement of Experimental Philosophy.

Bale, the antiquary, makes mention of a merchant that bought two noble libraries about these times for forty shillings: the books whereof served him for no other use but for waste paper.—Strype. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1545.

It would be a great curiosity if we could recover a list of his majesty's library. [Henry III.] It probably contained some illuminated MSS., as the librarian had the keeping of the colours too.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 1.

LIBRATION. It. Libramento; Sp. Libracion; Lat. Libratio, from librare, to poise, to balance.
A poising or balancing.

For the libration or reciprocation of the spirits in the tensility of the muscles would not be so perpetual, but cease in a small time, did not some more mystical principle than what is merely mechanical give assistance.

H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 10.

The libration of the moon, and the motion of the sun, about their centres, and consequently their obverting several parts of their bodies to us, may have an operation upon our atmosphere.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 98.

The noun—grant of a right; and, consequentially—exemption from restraint or control: and, thus, unrestrained liberty; freedom unchecked or uncontrolled. And licentious—

Dissolute, uncontrolled, unrestrained.

To haue licens & leue in Londone to dwelle.

Piers Plouhman, p. 5.

I am licensed boldly,
In diuinitie for to read,
And to confessen out of dread.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

This noble monk, of which I you devise,
Hath of his abbot, as him list, licence.

Id. The Shipman's Tale, v. 1293.

When he had geuen hym lycence, Paule stode on the steppes, and beckened with his hande to the people.

Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 21.

King Stephan licenced each of them to build so manie [castles] as they listed vpon their owne demesnes, hoping thereby that they would haue imploied their vse to his aduantage and commoditie.—Holinshed. Desc. of Eng. b. ii. c. 14.

At length he got licence of the maior and citizans to passe through the citie into Southwarke.—Id. Hen. III. an. 1267.

For a licenser is not contented now to give his single imprimatur, but brings his chair into the title-leaf; there sits and judges up, or judges down what book he pleases.

Milton. Colasterion.

What is this but to baffle and affront that sacred power, which is entrusted to government; and to profess ourselves not libertines, but licentiates of disorder?

Bp. Hall. Ser. Christian Liberty laid forth.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse.

L'Estrange.

That then all rule and reason they withstand
To purchase a licentious libertie.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

So strange diuersitie there was in that armie, both licentiously to commit all enormities, and patiently to abide all corrections.—Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 153.

And one error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 3. s. 1.

A wit, that no licentious pertness knows;
The sense, that unassuming candour shows

Savage. The Gentleman.

In this game is exposed in the most contemptuous manner, the profligate licentiousness of those shameless scriblers.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii. Note.

My lords, from the precedent now before us, we shall be induced, nay we can find no reason for refusing, to lay the press under a general licence, and then we may bid adieu to the liberties of Great Britain.

Chesterfield. Speech on the Licensing Bill.

By good luck he was not the licenser, otherwise the kingdom of France had never had the pleasure, the happiness I may say, of seeing that play acted. [Tartuffe.]—Id. Ib.

Courtiers, my lords, are too polite to reprove one another; the only place where they can meet with any just reproof, is a free though not a licentious stage.—Id. Ib.

The College of Physicians, in July, 1687, published an edict, requiring all the fellows, candidates, and licentiates, to give gratuitous advice to the neighbouring poor.

And many a liquorish lip, that highly is regarded.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

— Ingrateful man with licourish draughts
And morsels vnctious, greases his pure minde,
That from it all consideration slips.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

And if some nice and liquorous appetite
Desir'd more daintie dish of rare delite,
They scald the stored crab.—Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 1.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to day,
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?
Pleas'd to the last, he crops the flowery food,
And licks the hand just rais'd to shed his blood.
Pope. Essay on Man, Epist. 1.

He came galloping home at midnight to have a lick at the honey-pot.—Dryden. Amphitryon, Act ii. sc. 1.

Or if to gingerbread thou shalt descend,
And liquorish learning to thy babes extend.
Tickell. The Horn-Book.

He like a thorough true-bred spaniel licks
The hand which cuffs him, and the foot which kicks.
Churchill. Independence.

LICK, v. } Sw. Lägga is to lay, and also LICK, n. } to strike, i. e. to lay on (blows); "To lay it into him" is a common expression. And this appears to be the same word as the preceding;
and both founded upon the Goth. Laig-yan; A. S.
Lic-gan or lec-gan, ponere, jacere.

To lick, a lick, a licking—are common words in speech, though not in writing. See Jamieson, who produces an example of the verb from Burns and of the noun from Forbes. The noun is also used by Dryden, "He gave me a lick across the face."

LICTOR. Lat. Lictor, from lig-are, to bind.
See the quotation from Holland's Livy.

Lictors, in Livie, are ministers or sergeants attending upon the magistrates of Rome; namely, Dictators, Consuls, Pretours.—Holland. Livie, The Second Index.

Go, lictor, goe bind those hands fast, which armed a little before, wan the people of Rome their dominion: Go, I say, and hoodwinke his head, who saved and delivered this cittle from bondage, hang him by the necke, and strangle him upon a cursed tree.—Id. Ib. p. 19.

The Prætor bids his lictors mend their pace
Lest his colleague outstrip him in the race.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

But in vain would I retire, whilst I preserve the title with which I am at present distinguished, and continue to be attended with this embarrassing parade of lictors.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. vii. Let. 14.

LID. A. S. Hlid, the past part. of Hlid-an, tegere, operire, to cover, (dropping the aspirate h.)
(Tooke.)

That by which any thing (vessel, box, &c.) is

At the vessels that be open which haue no lyd nor cover-ynge vpon theym are vncleane.—Bible, 1551. Numeri, c. 19.

And when thou let'st down that transparent lid,
Of entrance there an army doth forbid.
Drayton. The Black Prince to the Countess of Salisbury.

— The flame o' th' taper
Bowes toward her, and would vnder-peepe her lids,
To see th' inclosed lights, now canopied
Vnder these windowes.—Shakes. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 2.
But two by turns their lids in slumber steep;
The rest on duty still their station keep.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

But it is still better protected by its lid. Of the superficial parts of the animal frame, I know none which, in its office and structure, is more deserving of attention than the eye-lid. It defends the eye; it wipes it; it closes it in sleep.

The proper notion of a lie is an endeavouring to deceive another by signifying that to him as true, which we ourselves think not to be so; in the ordinary way of communicating our thoughts.—Clarke, Ser. 133.

A lie is a breach of promise: for whoever seriously addresses his discourse to another, tacitly promises to speak the truth, because he knows that truth is expected.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. ii. c. 15.

LIE, v. } Anciently, and now provincially, to LIE, n. } lig. See TO LAY, which differs from to lie, only by grammatical usage: lay down, (sc.)
that load, or lay that load down; lie down, (sc.) yourself, or lie (sub. yourself) down. We tell a man to lay down his load, to put or place it down;
we tell a dog to lie down himself, to put or place himself down; the same distinction is observed in other words originally one; (e.g.) to rise or raise, to set or sit, (qv.)
To lie in (sc.) bed, or child-bed.

LIEGE, n. } Lat. Lig-are, to bind. Liegeance, LIEGANCE. } in Low Lat. Ligantia, the bond, LIEGEMAN. } says Spelman, (in v.) reciprocally connecting subject and chief, binding the one to protection and just government, the other to tribute and due subjection. The prince, or chief, is called ligius dominus, or liege lord; the subjects ligius populus, or homines ligii, liege people or liege men. In meaning, the words are equivalent to bound lord, and bound people; bound in the manner explained by Spelman. (And see Blackstone, i. 367.) The word is now applied as if the liegance or bond were only to attach the people to the prince; and in this usage, liege is—Sovereign, or supreme head or chief.

And whan our lyge londer, that yheled ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 457.

Nauer.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 338.

It sufficed in a riche man for a pretext of treson, to haue ben of kinred or alliaunce neare familiarite or leger ac-quaintaunce with any of those that were at any tyme the king's enemies.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 62.

— My thrice-puissant leige
Is in the very May-morne of his youth,
Ripe for exploits and mightie enterprises.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 2.

Yet if thou wilt renounce thy miscreaunce,
And my trew liegeman yield thyselfe for ay,
Life wil I graunt thee for thy valiaunce.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

He [Monk] resolv'd what before he had perform'd out of bounden duty to his leige lord, should be for ever continued with the same observing, out of the loyal affections to his gracious Sovereign.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1660.

In this voluntary submission the Bolognese did not mean so much to acknowledge the Pope as their direct Sovereign, as to put their city under his protection as liege lord.

(In personall suite to make me his lieutenant)
Off capt to him: and by the faith of men
I know my price, I am worth no worse a place.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

If such tricks as these strip you of your lieutenantrie, it had beene better you had not kiss'd your three fingers so oft.
Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 1.

Unless we should think that he had been a traitor to his natural prince, and so rewarded by the conqueror with lieutenantrie [of] the country.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 1. s. 9.

To this purpose were several other congratulations or addresses to the King, (some before, some after this of Middlesex,) viz. from Norwich, from Hereford, from the Lieutenancy of London.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1682.

Not being content to part with his large possessions, in lieu of the treasure by Christ offered in heaven, [he] was reputed deficient; could find no acceptance with God, nor admission into his kingdom.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

Thus also princes govern and magistrates execute justice in God's name: whence they are stiled God's, as being his lieutenants, administering that judgment, which belongs originally and principally to him.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 1.

One prize, a collection of limnings, he valued so highly,
that the person to whom it should fall might, in lieu of it, receive 2000*l.*—Walpole. Anec. of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

As it was impossible that he [Augustus] could personally command the legions of so many distant frontiers, he was indulged by the Senate, as Pompey had already been, in the permission of devolving the execution of his great office on a sufficient number of lieutenants.

LIFT, n. } To raise, to elevate, to heave, LIFTING, n. } to exalt, to put or place on high;
to take up, bear off, (sc.) that which belongs to another; to carry off, to steal; the Goth. Hlif-an was so used, (tollere, auferre,) furari. Shop-lifter is still a common word. Mr. Steevens produces an instance of this usage of lifting from Ben Jonson, and instances of lifter from other writers. Note on Troilus and Cressida.

Lift, the noun; Ger. Luft; A. S. Lyft, applied to the air or sky, is of common occurrence in G. Douglas. See LOFT. And see TOOKE and JAMIESON.

Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpeian rock, her cittadel Impregnable.—Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

And as in races, it is not the large stride or high lift that makes the speed: so in businesse the keeping close to the matter, and not taking of it too much at once procureth dispatch.—Bacon. Ess. Of Dispatch.

As for the casting up of the eyes, and lifting up of the hands, it is a kind of appeal to the Deity.

amulets, characters, and many superstitious waies in the cure of common diseases.—Brown. Vulgar Err. b. i. c. 11.

Both from the goal together start,
Scarce ran a step before they part,
No common ligament that binds
The various textures of their minds.
Swift. The Progress of Marriage.

For the ball and socket joint, besides the membrane already described, there is in some important joints, as an additional security, a short, strong, yet flexible ligament, inserted by one end into the head of the ball, by the other into the bottom of the cup.—Paley. Nat. Theology, c. 8.

They [the executioners] had given him one severe stretch by ligatures fixed to the extremities and passed over the axle, which was turned by a windlas.—Observer, No. 19.

LIGHT, v. } See To ALIGHT. A. S. Aliht- LIGHTE'N, v. } an, liht-an, to descend from a horse or carriage, (says Junius; and Skinner is to the same purpose,) perhaps, because this is no other than to lighten a horse or carriage of its burden; and then used generally,—

To come down, to dismount, to descend, to drop or fall upon.

Whan thei had wele riden, that tham thought right lang,
Thei lighted & abiden beside a water stank.
R. Brunne, p. 68.

Beneath the vase, and climbs around the sides.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

There being nothing which partakes more of the light than whiteness, and the light being capable of subsisting well in remoteness, it follows, that white may subsist in the same manner. In painting, the light and a white colour are but one and the same thing. Add to this that we have no colour which more resembles the air than white, and by consequence no colour which is lighter; from whence it comes that we commonly say the air is heavy, when we see the heavens covered with black clouds, or when a thick fog takes from us that clearness, which makes the lightness or serenity of the air.—Dryden. Art of Painting, § 330.

Light, true light, in the mind is, or can be nothing else but the evidence of the truth of any proposition.

Came but a while on liking here.

Dryden. Threnodia Augustalis.

LILACH. Fr. Lilas, lilach. Supposed to be so called, because the scent of its flowers resembles that of the lily, lilaceum.

The lilac, various in array, now white,
Now sanguine, and her beauteous head now set With purple spikes, pyramidal, as if Studious of ornament, yet unresolv'd
Which hue she most approv'd, she chose them all.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

LILLIPUTIAN. Applied to any thing very small, pigmean; from Swift's Voyage to Lilliput.

Escap'd the dangers of the deep,
When Gulliver fell fast asleep,
Stretch'd on the Lilliputian strand,
A giant in a pigmy land;
Watchful against impending harms.
All Lilliput cried out, "To arms."

Further yet, to exclude any limitation or diminution of these so general terms (at least to exclude any limitation in regard to all the members of the visible church, which are or have been incorporated thereto) it is expressed, that our Saviour's undertakings did respect even those, who (by their own default) might lose the benefit of them, and who in effect should not be saved.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

The constitution of such an unity doth involve the vesting some person or some number of persons with a sovereign authority (subordinate to our Lord) to be managed in a certain manner, either absolutely according to pleasure, or limitedly according to certain rules prescribed to it.
Barrow, vol. i. On the Unity of the Church.

Nothing can be more evident, than the necessity of limiting the field of our exertion if we wish to benefit society by our labours.

The limping god so deft at his new ministry.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

The commentator will lend a crutch to the weak poet, to help him to limp a little further, than he could on his own feet.—Pope. To Warburton, Sept. 20, 1741.

The ambition of the popes is a threadbare subject, and their pride, their cruelty, and their debauchery, have been the theme of many a declamation, and lengthened many a limping verse.—Eustace. Italy, vol. iv. App.

LIMPID, adj. Fr. Limpide; It. Limpido; Sp. Limpio; Lat. Limpidus, which Vossius derives from the Gr. λαμπειν, to shine. As the—

Fr. Limpid,—"clear, bright, sheen, (shining,) glazie, (or glassy,) transparent," (Cotgrave.)

Haste, to the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray:
Haste to the stream! Companion of thy care, Lo, I thy steps attend.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

Filter this solution through cap-paper, to have it clear and limpid.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 708.

A streamlet pure, limpid and wholesome, flows from the fountain and waters the little valley.
Eustace. Italy, vol. ii. c. 6.

LIN, v. Linnan, the A. S. root of this word, seems to have merged into the A. S. Blinnan, or be-linnan, cessare, desinere, to cease or stop, to desist. See BLIND, and BLUNT.

To stop, to cease, to desist, to give over or leave off.

Thise shall he fight with them, and wise shall win:
But the third time shall fayre accordaunce make:
And, if he then with victorie can lin,
He shall his dayes with peace bring to his earthly in.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

The spawner, when the time serveth for generation, followeth after the male, and never *linne*th picking and jobbing at his bellie with her muzzle.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 1.

If one plucke off the wings from a drone, and put him againe within the hive, he will never lin untill he have done the like by all the rest of the same kind.
Id. Ib. b. xi. c. 11.

The coach-driver did what he could possible at the first to stay them, by holding in the reins, by clapping them on the backs, and speaking gently to them: but in the end, perceiving he could do no good, and that they would have their swing, he gave place to their fury, and they never lin running, till they brought him near to the capitol, where they overthrew him and his coach, not far from the gate called at this present Ratumena.—North. Plutarch, p. 87.

LIN, n. In A. S. Hlynn, is a torrent, from hlynn-an, strepere, to roar; but lin seems applied not to the noisy fall, (see the Glossary to G. Douglas,) but to the still basin or pool above; where the water is held, reserved, lined or stopt in its flood. See LIN, ante.

It is called by the annotator on Drayton, a pool or watery moor; meres from whence rivers spring: and see POND. Somner calls it a British word, signifying a lake, pool, or standing water, such as that of the fens (of Lin-colnshire.)

—The nearest to her of kin
Is Toothy, tripping down from Verwin's rushy lin.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 5.

Then Tivy cometh down from her capacious lin.
Id. Ib. s. 6.

And therefore to recount her rivers from her lins, Abridging all delays, Mervinia thus begins.—Id. Ib. s. 9.

LINCHPIN. Skinner says, the pin which fastens the axle of a wheel, q. d. links or link-pin, the linking pin. Dr. Jamieson refers to the Sw. Lunta. And Ihre explains Lunta, luntsticka, paxillus axis, obex rotæ prefixus, i. e. the bar or bolt set before a wheel.

But if the rogue have gone a cup too far,
Left out his linchpin, or forgot his tar,
It suffers interruption and delay,
And meets with hindrance in the smoothest way.
Cowper. Truth.

LINCTURE. Lat. Lingere, lictum, to lick up.
Applied to—

Medicinal preparations, that are to be licked up—by the tongue.

Confections, treacle, mithridate, eclegmes, or linctures, &c.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

161. Next, there can be no reestablishment of the prime and ancient right of lineal succession to any thing, unless he that is put in possession of it has the right to succeed, and be the true and next heir to him he succeeds to.
Locke. Of Government, b. i. c. 9.

If she do not fashion and model circumstances, they will sit ugly on the things that wear them; if she do not temper the colours, and describe the lineaments, the draughts of practice will be but rude and imperfect, and little resemble the true patterns of duty.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Now all perform'd as solemn rites requir'd,
Each champion backward to his lines retir'd,
To wait the sign.—Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxviii.

But the idea soon vanished, lineal walks immediately enmings and Hollanders dwelling beyond the Rhine (I mean those auncient enemies of the state of our empire) do the like; insomuch, as the women there cannot devise to goe more rich and costly in their apparell, than to weare fine linnen.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

Line-seed loveth gravelly, or sandie grounds passing well, and commonly is sowed with one tilth and no more.

Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. c. 1.

If she love good clothes or dressing, have your learned counsell about you every morning, your French taylor, barber, linnener, &c.—B. Jonson. Silent Woman, Act iv. sc. 1.

The lint or nappie doune which linnen cloth beareth in maner of a soft cotton, especially such as commeth of ship sailles that have lien at sea, is of great use in physicke.

Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

We may here compare the soul to a linnen cloth, it must be first wash'd to take off its native hue and colour, and to make it white, and afterwards it must be ever and anon washed to preserve and keep it white.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 12.

I usually kept by me for burns, (an ointment) made only by beating up strong lime-water with as much good linseed oil as could be made thoroughly to incorporate with it into a very white unguent.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 114.

And I nine times, in linen garbs array'd,
In silent night, nine times to Trivir pray'd.

Grainger. Tibullus, b. i. Elegy 5.

In the different operations, however, which are necessary for the preparation of linen yarn, a good deal more industry is employed than in the subsequent operation of preparing linen cloth from linen yarn.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 8.

LING. A word (says Skinner) of common use in Lincolnshire: it is the Northern name for heath, hether, (Grose.) Bacon distinguishes heath from ling; and in Ayrshire, (v. Jamieson.) a thin long grass is so called. It is also the name of a species of codfish, perhaps (Skinner) a longitudine.

Plant bushes, heath, ling, and brakes, upon a wet or marshy ground.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 526.

There was growing in that place, where they were thus incamped, verie much of that kind of heath or ling, which the Scotchmen call hadder.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Dongall.

When harvest is ended, take shipping or ride,
Ling, salt-fish, and herring, for Lent to provide.

Tusser. August's Husbandry.

LING, ter. In some parts of Saxony, Ling, imago dicitur; and it was customary in A. S. to subjoin it to the name of the father, as Eadmund, Eadmon-ling, (and thus resembling the Gr. as Atrous, Atrides;)—it was further subjoined to denote offspring, or progeny, generally, as duck, duck-ling. In the former cases, Wachter derives from Lang-en, tangere;—a son being called ling, velut tangens, quia patrem proxime tangit origine. In the second, he derives from lang-en, pertinere, to pertain (to be-long), and he has several other unnecessary distinctions, with respect to the use and origin of this same termination ling. In A. S. Ing has a force (almost) equivalent to ling, as pend-a, pend-ing; and it may be our common participial and nominal termination ing; used to denote, the added circumstance of pertaining or belonging, of being connected with or dependent upon, derived or deduced from; and ling may be the same syllable with l prefixed; l being itself a further diminutive, (corrupted from dle;) signifying a deal or division, a part or portion. See Lye; Wachter, Prolegom. sec. 6; and Spelman, Gloss. Archæol. in v. Adelingres. Also Ing, ter. ante.

L'NGENCE. Lat. Lingens, pres. part. of Lingere, to lick. See Loch.
The quotation explains the usage.

A stick hereof [liquoris] is commonly the spoon prescribed to patients, to use in any lingences or loaches.

Fuller. Worthies. Nottinghamshire.

L'NGER, v. } From the A. S. Lang-ian, L'NGERER. } prolongare, producere, to pro-
L'NGERING, n. } long or lengthen out, to pro-L'NGERINGLY. } tract or draw out.

To lengthen, to protract; to remain or continue long; to move tardily or slowly; to stay, stop, or remain inactive.

But as they that make haste are partakers of helth, so they that linger are al partakers of perill.

Udal. Matthew, c. 3.

There muste be no lingering, the daungier is so neare at hand.—Id. Ib.

Of lingring doubtles such hope is sprong pardie,
That nought I finde displeasent in my sight.

Surrey. Bonum est mihi, &c.

And, in her songs, sends many a wishful vow
For his returne that seemes to linger late.

Spenser. Son. 88.

— Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive, and to thy speed add wings,
Least with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy lingring.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Coughs, asthmas, apoplexies, fevers, rheum,
All that kill dead, or lingeringly consume.

Cotton. On Tobacco.

Such a pain it was; and that no stupefying, no transient pain, but one both very acute and lingring: for we see, that he together with his two fellow-sufferers had both presence of mind, and time to discourse.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 32.

So life for whose preservation nature is so faithfully solicitous, cannot be extinguished, unless either chronical diseases do lingeringly destroy, or some acute do hastily snatch it away.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 368.

Slow let the prayers by thy meek lips be sung,
Nor let thy thoughts be distanc'd by thy tongue;
If ere the lingers are within a call,
Or if on prayers thou deign'st to think at all.

Thomson. The Incomparable Soporific Doctor.

On yonder cliffs a griesly band,
I see them sit, they linger yet,
Avengers of their native land.

Gray. The Bard.

L'NGET. Fr. Lingot. An ingot, (qv.) lump, or masse of metal, (Cotgrave.)

Among the Lacedemonians iron lingots quenched with vinegar that they may serue for no other vse, (hath been used for moneie).—Camden. Remaines. Monie.

L'NGLE. Fr. Ligneul, a shoemaker's thread, or a tatching end, (Cotgrave.) The langot of the shoe, is in the North, the latchet of the shoe, from (Fr.) Languet, lingula, a little tongue or slip, (Ray.)

His awl and lingel in a thong,
His tar box on his broad belt hung.

His breech of Cointree blue.—Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 4.

L'NGUIST. It. and Sp. Linguista. From the Lat. Lingua, a tongue. See LANGUAGE.
One skilled in tongues or languages.

— He saith, "Sir,
I love your judgment; whom do you prefer,
For the best linguists?" and I sillily
Said, that I thought Calepine's Dictionary.—Donne, Sat. 4.

And though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he have not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteem'd a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only.—Milton. Of Education.

For had they found a linguist half so good,
I make no question but the tower had stood.

Pope. Satires of Donne, Sat. 4.

L'NIMENT. Fr. Liniment; It. Linimento; Lat. Linimentum, from linire, to anoint; Gr. Λειαίνω, to render smooth and slippery, as is done by ointment when smeared over any thing. It is in Fr. (Cotgrave) applied to—

The rubbing or smearing; and also to the ointment itself. In English only to the latter.

The root brought into a liniment cureth the lentils or red spots, yea and the infection of the leprosie.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 21.

The bird turning her head, catches hold upon them with her bill, and a little compressing the glandules, squeezes out and brings away therewith an oily pap or liniment, most fit and proper for the inunction of the feathers and causing their little filaments more strongly to cohere.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

For the continual secretion of this important liniment, and for the feeding of the cavities of the joint with it, glands are fixed near each joint; the excretory ducts of which glands, dripping with their balsamic contents, hang loose like fringes within the cavity of the joints.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

LINK, v. } Skinner derives from Ger.
LINK, n. } Gelench, which he tells us means L'NKING, n. } a junction, knot, or fastening, and also the ring of a chain; from Lenk-en, flectere, to bend; he has no authority for gelench so used. And link is probably from the A. S. Lencgan, to lengthen; meaning, a length: Add another link, i. e. a length, to the chain. It is applied to—

The parts by which a chain is extended to its length; to the parts of which a chain is formed.

To link is—

To connect or fasten together; to combine, (as a series of rings, and generally,) to conjoin, to concatenate.

For Salomon write al that things tweine
Trowth and mercy linked in a cheine.

Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

A jewel, yea a gemme of womanhed,
Whose perfect vertues, linked as in chaine,
So did adorne that humble wiuely hed,
As is not rife to finde the like againe.

And thou shalte make hokes of golde and two cheines of fyne golde: lynkeworke and wrethed.—Bible. Exodus, c. 28.

— Be advized for the best,

Ere thou thy daughter linck, in holy band
Of wedlocke, to that new unknowne guest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

I know I had divulg'd a truth link'd inseparably with the most fundamental rules of Christianity. to stand or fall together.—Milton. Judgment of M. Bucer concerning Divorce.

As nature has framed the several species of beings as it were in a chain, so man seems to be placed as the middle link between angels and brutes.—Spectator, No. 408.

All the tribes and nations that composed it [the Roman Empire] were linked together, not only by the same laws and by the same government, but by all the facilities of commodious intercourse, and of frequent communication.

Eustace. Italy, vol. i. c. 10.

Of this point, each machine is a proof, independently of all the rest. So it is with the evidences of a divine agency. The proof is not a conclusion which lies at the end of a chain of reasoning, of which chain each instance of contrivance is only a link, and of which, if one link fail the whole falls, but it is an argument separately supplied by every separate example.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 6.

LINK. Not from the Gr. Λυξος, but from Ger. Lenchen, flectere, to bend, quia Resina tædæ complicatur, (Skinner.)

Nymphidius supposing the souldiers had called him, as hasting to confirme the waueringe, and preuent the tumult, went thither himselfe without torches and linches.

Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 10.

O may no link-boy interrupt their love.—Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

Though thou art tempted by the link-man's call
Yet trust him not along the lonely wall;
In the mid-way he'll quench the flaming brand,
And share the booty with the pilfering band.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

L'NNET. Fr. Linotte, linaria avis; so called, perhaps, because it feeds on line, or flax, or on the seeds of flax.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

LINT. See LINE, LINEN.

LINTEL. } Fr. Linteau; Sp. Lintel; from LINTEEN. } the ancient limentum, for limen, q.d. limentellum, whence the god Limentinus, who presides over the thresholds or posts of a door, (Skinner.) Lintel is applied to,—

The head-piece of the door or casement.

And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both cormorant and the bittern shall lodge in the upper lintels of it: their voyce shall sing in the windows, desolation shall be in the thresholds, for he shall uncover the cedar work.—Bible. Zephaniah, ii. 14.

LIP, v. } A. S. Lippa; Dut. Lip; Ger. Lippe; LIP, n. } Sw. Läpp, (from the Lat. Labium, Skinner.) Wachter—from Ger. Leiben, to divide, to separate. Not improbably from lap, to fold over, as the lips fold over the mouth.

To lip,—to touch with the lips, to kiss.

Lip is applied generally, to the edge of any thing that folds or may fold or lap over.

Cotgrave has lippe, a lip; and lippa, thick lipped, great-lip; also, a powting or hanging the lip, as a child that's ready to cry.

Lip-good,—(met.) good in words only.

Philip botē on hys lyppe, and perceyued R. thought.
R. Brunne, p. 155.

King Edward had so manie waies doone him good, and had giuen him iust cause of thankfulness, which is the common reward of benefits, and which little recompense whoso neglecteth to make, being but a little lip-labour, Non est laudari dignus, nec dignus amari.
Holinshed. Edw. I. an. 1279.

Their office is to pray for others, and not to be the lip- working deacons of other men's appointed words.
Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

There is not so good compression made upon the lips of the wound thro' those holes, as to hinder them from thrusting out.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vi. c. 5.

Lip-devotion will not serve the turn; it undervalues the very things it prays for. It is indeed the begging of a denial, and shall certainly be answered with what it begs.

LIPOTHYMY. Fr. Lipothamie; Gr. Λειπο- θυμία, λιπ-ειν, to leave or quit, and θυμος, the mind.

A swooning, wherein the patient seems dead.
Cotgrave,—i. e. wherein his soul seems to have left him.

In lipothymies or swoondings he used the frication of this finger [the ring-finger] with saffron and gold.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 4.

LIPPITUDE. Fr. Lippitude; It. Lippitudine;
Lat. Lippitudo; lippus, from λειψ-ειν, fundere, stillare, to pour, to drop; because the eyes drop tears.

A running of the eyes, blear-eyedness.

Those [diseases] that are infectious, are; First, such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours; and therefore pass easily from body to body: such are pes-tilences, lippitudes, and such like.

The disposition not to liquefy proceedeth from the easie emission of the spirits, whereby the grosser parts contract.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 840.

Liquefiable, and not liquefable, proceed from these causes: liquefaction is ever caused by the detention of the spirits, which play within the body, and open it.—Id. Ib.

Ordinary liquation in wax and oily bodies is made by a gentler heat, where the oil and salt, the fixed and fluid principles, will not easily separate.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

And cart-wheeles squeak not when they are liquored.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 117.

The longer malt or herbs, or the like, are infused in liquour, the more thick and troubled the liquour is; but the longer they be decocted in the liquour, the clearer it is.

Aristophanes, however, uses the expression λίσπηλωσσα, which is interpreted a slippery, stuttering tongue, and some etymologists decide for a Greek original. Stuttering or stammering is distinguished by Wilkins from lisp; he considers both to be defects of speaking, the first as to the continuity of speech, the second as to the prolation of particular letters. (Real Character, pt. ii.
c. 9.) *Lisp*ing, or—

The defect in the prolation (as Wilkins terms
it) or utterance of particular letters arises from striking the tongue against the inside of the teeth.

Somewhat he lisped for his wantonness
To make his English swete upon his tonge.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 267.

Such ceremonies were vnto them as an A, B, C, to learne to spell and read, and as a nurse to feede them with mylke and pappe, and to speake vnto them after their own capacity

Let those who are still bent to hold this obstinate literality, so prepare themselves, as to share in the account for all these transgressions, when it shall be demanded at the last day, by one who will scan and shift things with more than a literal wisdom of equity.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 14.

How wild a paradox it is to tie those frequent and large promises of the prophets made to Judah and Israel, Zion and Jerusalem, to a carnal literality of sense; and to make account of their accomplishment accordingly.

Bp. Hall. The Revelation Unrevealed, § 15.

It can admit neither distinction, nor other construction than the words bear literally.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 7. s. 15.

Surely this is the proper function of literate elegance, to figure virtue in so lively and fresh colours, that our imagination may be so taken with the beauty of virtue, as it may invite our mindes to make love to her in solitude.

Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 3.

In the daies of this Gregorie also, there lived that famous clearke, John Scot, a Scottishman indeed borne, but brought vp in studie of good literature at Athens.

With soft and unaffected lays.

Cooper. The Retreat of Aristippus, Epist. 1.

Lord Bacon was the first person who took this comprehensive view of the different departments of study; and who pointed out to all the classes of literary men, the great end to which their labours should conspire; the multiplication of the sources of human enjoyment, and the extension of man's dominion over nature.

Stewart. Of the Human Mind, pt. ii. s. 2. Introd.

They teach the people, that the debauchers of virgins, almost in the arms of their parents, may be safe inmates in their houses, and even fit guardians of the honour of those husbands who succeed legally to the office which the young litters had pre-occupied, without asking leave of law or conscience.—Burke. Let. to a Member of the Nat. Assembly.

They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race, (for some time a growing nuisance amongst you) a set of pert, petulant, litters, to whom, instead of their proper, but severe, unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant part of men of wit and pleasure, of gay, young, military sparks, and dangles at toilets.—Id. Ib.

Our descendants may possibly contemplate with equal ridicule and surprise, the preposterous partiality which the present age has shown to the frippery and the tinsel of French literature.—Eustace. Italy, vol. ii. c. 10.

Next followeth the liver, which lyeth on the right side. In that which is called the head of the liver, much variety and difference there is.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

Demon, my friend, once liver-sicke of love,
Thus learn'd I by the signes his grief remove.

Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 7.

The ruthless falchion op'd his tender side,
The panting liver pours a flood of gore,
That drowns his bosom till he pants no more.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

The liver is fastened in the body by two ligaments; the first, which is large and strong, comes from the covering of the diaphragm, and penetrates the substance of the liver; the second is the umbilical vein which, after birth, degenerates into a ligament.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

LIVERY, n. } Fr. Livree; It. Livrea; Sp. Librea; Low Lat. Liberatio; (see in Spelman;) from the Fr. Livrer, to deliver: to the origin of this word (says Junius) these words of Chaucer allude: "that is the conisance of my livery, to all my servants delivered." And see the quotation from Spenser. Livery formerly denoted,—

The clothes, and food also, delivered and distributed by masters to their servants; now, to the clothes or marks upon the clothes, by which the servants of one master may be distinguished from those of another. More generally, the clothing, garb, or dress. To livery,—

To clothe or deck in livery; to clothe or deck.

The liverymen of London are those freemen who are entitled to wear the livery of their respective companies.

To London for to com, whan parlement suld be,
Als custom was wonne & tak ther his liure.

R. Brunne, p. 146.

An Haberdasher, and a Carpenter,
A Webbe, a Deyer, and a Tapiser,
Were all yclothed in o livere,
Of a solempne and grete fraternite.

Chaucer. Prologue, v. 365.

— The Spring, the Sommer,
The childing Autumne, angry Winter change
Their wonted liuries.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act ii. sc. 2.

So dear to Heaven is saintly Chastity,
That, when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her.—Milton. Comus.

We doing it to one who bears his name, and wears his liery, (for the poor man's rags are badges of his relation unto God) he thereby judges, that we have little goodwill, little respect, little compassion toward himself.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

The garden, which before he had not seen,
In Spring's new livery clad of white and green.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Our youth, all livery'd o'er with foreign gold,
Before her dance.

Pope. Epilogue to the Satires.

— At once the clouds assume Their gayest liveries; these with silvery beams
Fring'd lovely, splendid those in liquid gold.

Mallet. The Excursion, c. 1.

LIVERY, i.e. Delivery, (qv.) See the quotation from Blackstone.

Therefore inclining to his goodly reason,
Agreeing well both with the place and season,
She gladly did of that same babe accept,
As of her owne by liverie and seisin.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

And to the end the Romanes might know that the Gaules were not well pleased for the injury they had received; to have an honest colour to begin wars with the Romanes, he sent an Herald before to Rome to demand livery of the man that had offended him, that he might punish him accordingly.—North. Plutarch, p. 120.

What livery is, wee by common use in England knew well enough, namely, that it is allowance of horse-meate, as they commonly use the word in stabling, as to keepe horses at livery:—the which word I guesse, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightly foode. So in great houses the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evenings allowance for drinke. And livery is also called, the upper weede which a serving man wearreth, so called (as I suppose) for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure.—Spenser. On Ireland.

I am denyde to sue my liuerie here,
And yet my letters patents giue me leaue.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 2.

Our little Cupid hath sued livery
And is no more in his minority.

Donne. Eclogue, Dec. 26, 1613.

This livery of seisin is no other than the pure feodal investiture, or delivery of corporeal possession of the land or tenement, which was held absolutely necessary to complete the donation.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

When the male heir arrived at the age of twenty-one, or the heir female to that of sixteen, they might sue out their livery, or ousterlemain, that is, the delivery of their lands out of their guardian's hands.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 5.

LIVID. } Fr. Livide, lividité; It. Livido, LIVIDNESS. } lividezza; Lat. Lividus, (of un-LIVIDITY. } known etymology,) the same, says
Vossius, as plumbeus, leaden. Fr. Lividité,— Lividity,—the colour appearing upon a stroke, black and blue; a dead, earthy, leaden hew,
(Cotgrave.)

It was a pestilent feuer but as it seemeth not seated in the veynes or humors for that there followed no carbuncle, no purple or livide spots, or the like, the masse of the bodie being not tainted.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 9.

May the clouds frown, and livid poisons breathe,
And stain heaven's azure with the shade of death.

Pitt. Job, c. 3.

Cut you through this livid or black escar, and put in a pea in the middle of it.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vi. c. 1.

The signs of a tendency to such a state [the atrabiliarian] are darkness or lividity of the countenance, dryness of the skin, &c.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 6. s. 28.

He [Benedetto] imitated his uncle's extravagantly dark shades, caught the roundness of his flesh, but with a disagreeable lividness, and possessed at least as much grace and dignity.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

The lixivial, of which the two former are produced, sometimes shoot on the sides of the glass, like the brushy end of the plant called equisetum.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 3. s. 29.

Helmont has ingeniously conjectured, that these lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alcalizate form in the bodies that afford them, but are productions of the fire.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 599.

The fixed nitre is of an alcalizate nature and participates the qualities belonging generally to lixivate salts.

Id. Ib. p. 370.

LIZARD. Fr. Lézard; It. Luzardo, lucerta; Sp. Lazarto; Lat. Lacerta; so called because its limbs resemble the arms (lacertos) of man.

And these are also vncleane to you amonge the thingis that crepe vpon y^e erth: the hedge hogge stellio, the licerte, the snayle, & the moule.—Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 11.

I haue lien streaking me like a lubber, when the sunne did shine, and now I striue all in vaine to lode the cart when it raineth.—Gascoigne. To Lord Gray of Wilton.

The army which besieged it (consisting of Catti, Vsipij and Matiaci) was already departed away loaden with spoiles.
Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 158.

Thus my lorde continued at Asker vntill Candlemas, against which feast the king caused to be sent to my L. three or foure cart lodes of stuffe, as bedding, &c.

Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1527.

The Frenchman did it out of covetousness, that so two loaders might bring double grist to his mill.

Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

Deiphobus to seize his helmet flies,
And from his temples rends the glittering prize;
Valiant as Mars, Meriones drew near,
And on his loaded arm discharg'd his spear.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

— For look the world around
A pair so wretched is not to be found
Our life's a load; encumber'd with a charge,
We long to set th' imprison'd soul at large.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Every vice is a loader; but that's a ten.

Id. Juvenal, Sat. 6. Arg.

And all that freedom's highest aim can reach
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

LOAF. Ger. Laib, leib; Sw. Lef; A. S. Hlaf, (a broad,) the past part. of hlif-ian, to raise; in Mæso-Goth. Hlaibs, the past part. of hleib-yan, to raise, to lift up; after the bread or brayed grain has been wetted, (by which it becomes dough.) then follows the leaven, by which it becomes loaf, (i. e. raised.) (See Tooke, ii. 157.) The Ger. Laib, leib, shows its immediate descent from the Mæso-Goth., and the Sw. Lef from the A. S. Loaf is,—

A raised mass of bread, of sugar, &c.

In his tyme was gret deorthe:

LOB, n. Lob, n. looby, and lubber, LOB, v. appear to be merely words of LOOBY. consequential usage, from the LOOBYLY. verb to lob,— LU'BBER. To drop or let fall or depend LU'BBERLY. (as a lap or lappet) inertly, LU'BBARD, adj. whether from weariness or LU'BBARD, n. laziness; and to be thus applied to—

An inert or inactive, lazy or sluggish, heavy or lumpish, dull or stupid person.

— And hure wenches after Grete lobies and longe. and loth were to swynke.
Piers Plouhman, p. 3.

But as the drone, the honey hive doth rob:
With woorthy books, so deals this idle lob.
Gascoigne. A Remembrance.

And some doctoures do very well expounde it of certaine persons that walked inordinately, and would not worke themselves though they were sturdye lubbers, but liued on other men's charitie.—Fryth. Workes, p. 87.

And though you thinke it lubber-like to leese
Yet shoulde you lende that one halfe of your cote.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Bion therefore was but a very lob and foole in saying thus: If I wist that with praising a peece of ground I could make it good, rich, and fertile, it should want for no praises; and rather would I commend it than toyle and moile in digging, tilling and doing worke about it.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 80.

— And their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping their hides and hips.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 2.

If you will measure your lubber's length againe, tarry.
Id. Lear, Act ii. sc. 4.

The p^{ot} of the farce was a grammar school, the master setting his boys their lessons, and a loobily country fellow putting in for a part among the scholars.—L'Estrange.

We've given you tragedies, all sense defying,
And singing men, in woful metre dying,
Thus 'tis when heavy lubbers will be flying.
Dryden. Prol. 29.

Yet their wine and their victuals these curmudgeon lubbers
Lock up from my sight in cellars and cupboards.
Swift. Apollo to the Dean.

Or if the garden with its many cares
All well repaid, demand him, he attends
The welcome call, conscious how much the hand
Of lubbard Labour needs his watchfull eye,
Oft loit'ring lazily, if not o'erseen,
Or misapplying his unskilful strength.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

LOBBY. In Low Lat. Lobium, from the Ger. Laube, (a leaf,) a place covered or shaded by foliage or leaves; any covered place. (See Wachter.) Skinner calls it,—Porticus, seu umbraculum ædium.

If you finde him not this moneth, you shall nose him as you go vp staires into the lobby.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 3.

How in our voyding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly wayted for my coming forth?
Id. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 1.

That in the lobby with the ladies were.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. vi.

No more, with plaint, or suit importunate,
The thronged lobby echoes, nor with staff,
Or gaudy badge, the busy pursuivants
Lead to wish'd audience.
Jago. Edge Hill, b. ii.

But if by habeas corpus or otherwise, he [a tyger] was to come into the lobby of the house of commons whilst your door was open, any of you would be more stout than wise, who would not gladly make your escape out of the back window.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

LOBE. Lobes du foye, the lobes of the liver;—from the Gr. Λοβος, (Menage,) the lower part (of the ear,) the outer part (of the liver;) that by which we take hold (of the ear, &c.) from λαβ-ειν, to take. Cotgrave calls it the lap, or lowest part of the ear, the lappet of the liver.—Also the lobes of a leaf, seed, &c.

'Tis plain, this lobe is so unsound.—Parnell. Book-worm.

A pea or bean being committed to the ground, is first found to cleave into two parts, which are as it were two leaves or lobes of the Placenta.
Miller. Gardener's Dictionary, in v. Seed.

The heart lies on the left side; a lobe of the lungs on the right; balancing each other, neither in size nor shape.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

When these parts are touched by the legs of flies, the two lobes of the leaf instantly spring up, the rows of the prickles lock themselves fast together and squeeze the unwary animal to death.—Smellie. Phil. of Nat. Hist. vol. i. p. 5.

LOBSTER. A. S. Loppestre, lopust: it is called by Chaucer simply the loppe; and has its name from the verb, to leap:—the leap or spring of the lobster is noted by naturalists.

From this signet (as it seemeth) there comen croked strikes, like to the claws of a loppe.—Chaucer. Astrolabie.

As for the lobsters, they love rockes and stonie places.
Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 31.

The fame of so great a man's coming [Apicius] had landed before him, and all the fishermen sailed out to meet him, and presented him with their fairest lobsters.
King. Art of Cookery.

The most sure word of the Lord to shew his humanitie to be local (that is to say, contained in one place onely) dyd say vnto his disciples, I ascēd vnto my father.
Fryth. Workes, fol. 140.

If in prose and religion it were as justifiable, as in poetry and fiction, to invoke a local power (for anciently both Jews and Gentiles, and Christians have supposed to every country a singular genius) I would therein join with the author.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. l. Selden. Illustrations.

It destroyes the truth of Christ's humane bodie, in that it ascribes quantitie to it, without extension, without localitie.
Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, s. 3.

O Saviour, whiles thou now sittest gloriously in heaven, thou dost no lesse impart thyselfe unto us, then if thou stoodst visibly by us, then if we stood locally by thee; no place can make difference of thy vertue and ayde.

& the doren after hom wepinde loke vaste.
R. Gloucester, p. 495.

I trow thou woldest locke me in thy chest.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5899.

Thus whan he [Auarice] hath his cofer loken,
It shall not after ben vnstoken.
But whan he list to haue a sight
Of golde, howe that it shineth bright.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Though I departe, he woll not so,
There is no locke maie shet hym out.—Id. Ib.

— And went unto the dore
To enter in, but found it locked fast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

No gate so strong, no locke so firme and fast,
But with that percing noise flew open quite, or brast.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 8.

They [the Jews] were lock'd under the discipline of childish rudiments, suiting their raw capacities, and under the bondage of slavish yokes, befitting their stubborn dispositions.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

First he expounded both his pockets
And found a watch, with rings and lockets.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

Midst arms, and cars, and coursers stretch'd supine
In slumber lock'd and drench'd in fumes of wine.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xviii.

LOCK. Ger. Lock; A. S. Loca, locca, loccas, flocci, tomenta, locks of wool or flocks, of some called lucks; also locks of hair, foretops, (Somner.)

Etymologists are almost unanimous for a Greek origin, but differ much as to the specific word.

A lock of hair; perhaps so much as was closed together, tied or fastened into one part or portion.

And vanshie alle myne vertues. and myn faire lockes.
Piers Plouhman, p. 242.

With lockes crull as they were laide in presse.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 81.

Her golden lockes she roundly did uptye
In braded tramels, that no looser heares
Did out of order stray about her daintie eares.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

His amber-colour'd locks in ringlets run,
With graceful negligence, and shone against the sun.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

But let him weep, him wretched must we call,
Whom lovely locks and sparkling eyes enthrall,
Where beauty serves but as a treacherous blind
To hide each vice that taints the female mind.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xv.

LOCOMOTION. } Lat. Locus, a place, and Lo'COMOTIVE. } motio, from movere, motum, to move.

Motion from place to place.

Now all progression or animal locomotion being (as Aristotle teacheth) performed tractu and pulsu; that is, by drawing on, or impelling forward some part which was before in station, or at quiet.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. iii. c. 1.

I shall consider their motion, or locomotive faculty, whereby they convey themselves from place to place, according to their occasions, and way of life.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 8.

The lower limb, forming a part of the column of the body; having to support the body, as well as to be the means of its locomotion; firmness was to be consulted, as well as action.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

The loco-motive mania of an Englishman circulates his person, and of course his cash, into every quarter of the kingdom.—Observer, No. 85.

LO'CUST. Fr. Langouste; Sp. Langosta; It. Locusta; Lat. Locusta. Vossius prefers the etymology of Perottus;—ex locus and ustus, quod tactu multa urat, morsu vero omnia erodat.

Locustical, in Byrom, is coined for the occasion.

And locustis wenten out of the smoke of the pitt.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 9.

And there came oute of the smoke locustes vpon the earth.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Our Marie was no sooner dead,
But that hir Guizard's arme,
And into Scotland locusts-like
In her pretext did swarm.
Warner. Albion's England, b. x. c. 45.

As the scorch'd locusts from their fields retire,
While fast behind them runs the blaze of fire;
Driv'n from the land before the smoky cloud,
The clustering legions rush into the flood.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Diodorus and Strabo, Solinus and Ælian,
And authorities down from the Aristotelian,
Have mention'd whole clans that were wont to subsist,
In the East, upon locusts as big as your fist:
Ergo, so did the Baptist.—Byrom. Ep. to J. Bl—k—n, Esq.

Or had need of lodesmen or vitails.
Chaucer. The Legend of Hipsiphile & Medea.

At euery hauen they can ariue,
Where as they wote is good passage,
Of innocence they can not striue,
With waives nor no rockes rage,
So happy is their lodemanage.
Chaucer. A Ballad. Women. Their Doubleness.

Who seeth you now, my right lodesterre?
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

The schyp arose againe the wawes,
The lodesman hath lost his lawes.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

For lyke as y^e lodestone draweth vnto it yron: so doeth beneficence and well doying allure all men vnto her.
Udal. Marke, c. 5.

When they light vpon a smal veine, or chance to leese the load which they wrought, by means of certaine strings that may hap to crosse it, they begin at another place neere-hand, and so drawe by gesse to the main load againe.
Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 10.

Black stormes and fogs are blown up from farre,
That now the pylote can no loadstarre see.
Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

Now that I am to passe from marbles, to the singular and admirable natures of other stones; who doubteth but the magnet or loadstone will present it self in the first place? for is there any thing more wonderful, and wherein nature hath more travelled to show her power, than in it.
Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 10.

Two magnets, heaven and earth, allure to bliss;
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this:
The weak-attraction of the greater fails,
We nod a while, but neighbourhood prevails.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

LO'GIC. } Fr. Logique; It. and Sp. Lo-
LO'GICAL. } gica; Lat. Logica; Gr. Λογική, LO'GICALLY. } from λογ-ος, and that from λεγ- LO'GICIAN. } ειν, to say, to speak.

It is the province of grammar to teach the etymology, and manner of signification of words; and of logic, to teach the use of words in general reasoning:—It will thus embrace science and art: science, or knowledge; and art, or power or skill in the use of knowledge, (art being the practical use of science, or principles of science.)

Logy is in constant use for the formation of scientific terms; of one of the more ancient and unusual, aitiology, (Gr. Αιτιολογία; αἰτία, causa, and λογος, sermo.) Bp. Hall supplies an instance. (See the quotation from him in v. Chronology.) Among modern empiricisms may be mentioned, craniology, and phrenology.

Logyk ich lerede hure.—Piers Plouhman, p. 189.

Logike hath eke in his degree
Betwene the trouth and the falshede
The pleyne wordes for to shede.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And, therefore, I haue so far as my slender practice hath enabled me, enterprised to ioigne an acquaintance betweene logike, and my countrie-men; from which they haue beene heretofore barred, by tongues vnacquainted.
Wilson. Arte of Logike, Epist.

But now here wyll bee objected that I fayne such a church, as our logicians doe, intentionem secundum, that is a thyng yt is no where.—Barnes. Workes, p. 245.

Thus while we reduce the brevity of St. Paul to a plainer sense, by the needful supply of that which was granted between him and the Corinthians, the very logic of his speech extracts him confessing that the Lord's command lay in a seeming contrariety to this his counsel.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

But they are put off by the names of vertues, and natures, and actions, and passions, and such other logical words.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 98.

This clause of being a meet-help would show itself so necessary, and so essential in that demonstrative argument, that it might be logically concluded: therefore she who naturally and perpetually is no meet-help, can be no wife.
Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 9.

First, like a right cunning and sturdy logician, he denies my argument, not mattering whether in the major or minor.
Id. Colasterion.

I argue thus: the world agrees
That he writes well, who writes with ease:
Then he, by sequel logical,
Writes best, who never thinks at all.
Prior. Epistle to Fleetwood Shephard.

Bare lies with bold assertions they can face;
But dint of argument is out of place.
The grim logician puts them in a fright.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The honest man employs his wit as correctly as his logic.
Warburton. Dedication to the Free-Thinkers, (1738.)

A process of logical reasoning has been often likened to a chain supporting a weight.
Stewart. Of the Human Mind, vol. ii. c. 1. s. 1.

Even when one proposition in natural philosophy is logically deducible from another, it may frequently be expedient, in communicating the elements of the science, to illustrate and confirm the consequence, as well as the principle, by experiment.—Id. Ib. c. 2. s. 3.

LO'GOGRIPII. Gr. Λογος, speech, and γριφος, rete, a net; and, consequentially, quæstio ænigmatica,—

An enigmatical question, a puzzle, a riddle.

Or spun out riddles, and weav'd fiftie tomes
Of logogripes, &c.
B. Jonson. An Execration upon Vulcan.

Worse than the logogryphes of later times,
Or hundreth riddles. Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 1.

LO'GOMACHY. Fr. Logomachie; It. and Sp. Logomachia; Lat. Logomachia; Gr. Λογομαχία, from λογ-ος, speech, and μαχη, fight or contention.

A dispute about words; a verbal dispute, or contention.

As for the difference, which is pretended in the use of liturgies in "other reformed churches," which you say do "use liturgies, but do not binde their ministers to the use of them," it will prove no better than a meer logomachy.
Bp. Hall. Answer to Smectymnuus's Vindication.

LO'GOTHETE. Gr. Λογοθετης, λογος, and θετης, from τιθεσθαι, to put or place, to dispose.
For the application, see the example.

In the ancient system of Constantine, the name of logothete, or accountant, was applied to the receivers of the finances: the principal officers were distinguished as the logothetes of the domain, of the posts, the army, the private and public treasure; and the great logothete, the supreme guardian of the laws and revenues, is compared with the chancellor of the Latin Monarchies.
Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 53.

LOIN. Anciently written Lende. Dut. and Ger. Lende, lenden; Fr. Longe; It. Longia, lonza; all from the Lat. Lumbi, says Skinner. In A. S. Lendena, perhaps from the A. S. verb Hlon-an; Ger. Len-en, to lean, niti, reclinare, recumbere, quia in lumborum extrema reclinamus sedentes. Martinius, (in Wachter.)

And this Jon hadde clothing of camel's heris, and a girdle of skyn about his leendis.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

Thys John had hys garmēt of camel's heere, and a gyrdle of a skinne about his loynes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

A barme-cloth eke as white as morwe milk
Upon hire lendes, full of many a gore.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3238.

Yea, and kynges shall come out of thy loynes.
Bible, 1551. Gen. c. 35.

He named a parcell of Armorica lieng on the south, and in manner vpon the verie loine after his own name.
Holinshed. The History of England, b. ii. c. 5.

He [George Bouchier] was the third sonne to John Earle of Bath, whose ancestors were descended from out of the loines of kings, and men of great honour and nobility.
Id. The Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1571.

See, see the injur'd prince, and bless his name,
Think on the martyr from whose loins he came.
Otway. Epilogue, April 21, 1682.

Her loins with patch-work cincture were begirt,
That more than spoke diversity of dirt.
Smart. The Hilliad.

LO'ITER, v. } To loiter is to kater. See

Jortin, Dis. 5.

All that such a loiterer can possibly want, are a convenient postchaise, a letter of credit, and a well furnished trunk.
Eustace. Italy, vol. i. Prel. Dis.

LOLL, v. } To loll out one's tongue, (i. e.) LILL, v. } exere linguam, perhaps from the Dut. Lelle, lelleken van de tongde, pars linguæ anterior, to thrust forth the front part of the tongue, (Skinner.) To loll appears to mean, generally,— To hang or depend upon, to lean upon or against; to hang from, as the tongue from the mouth.

Swift (Cantata) uses the word lolloping, which may yet be heard in vulgar speech.

And as a letherene pors. *loll*ed his chekus.

LONDONER. A native or inhabitant of London. Londonism, (a word used, and probably invented, by Mr. Pegge,)—the idiomatic speech of Londoners.

The town me clepuh Lude's town, that ys wyde cowth;
And now me clepuh it London, that ys lygter in the mouth.—R. Gloucester, p. 44.

The king hearing of this his demeanor, was so highly offended withall, that he sent to the Londoners, willing them to go thither and fetch him to his presence.
Holinshed. Hen. III. an. 1232.

To confine myself to the subject—which is, to shew that the humble and accepted dialect of London, the Londonisms as I may call them, are far from being reproachable in themselves, however they may appear to us not born within the sound of Bow-bells.—Pegge. Anec. of the English Language.

Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tow'r,
Where I may oft out-watch the Bear
With thrice great Hermes.—Milton. Il Penseroso.

It is not good for man to be alone. Hitherto all things that have been nam'd were approv'd of God to be very good:
loneliness is the first thing which God's eye nam'd not good.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

He adds, "If of court-life you know the good,
You would leave loneness," I said "not alone
My loneness is." Donne, Sat. 4.

So though thy love sleepe in eternall night,

By shady night, far from or house or town.
More. Pre-existence of the Soul, s. 49.

Deep in a dell her cottage lonely stood,
Well thatch'd, and under covert of a wood.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Neither shall we content ourselves in lonesome tunes, and private soliloquies, to whisper out the divine praises; but shall loudly excite and provoke others to a melodious consonance with us.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Trees bounded their sight to the breadth of the river and length of the avenue, while the gloominess of the prospect added horror to the loneness of the place.
Oldys. Life of Sir W. Raleigh.

When I have on those pathless wilds appear'd

LONG, v. } A. S. Lengian; Ger. Langen; LONG, ad. } Sw. Längia. The same word as LO'NGING, n. } the preceding, differently applied.
LO'NGINGLY. } "When we consider (says Tooke) LO'NGLY. } that we express a moderate desire for any thing, by saying that we incline (i. e. bend ourselves) to it; will it surprise us that we should express an eager desire by saying that we long,
i. e. make long, lengthen, or stretch ourselves after it, for it? especially when we observe, that after the verb to incline we say to or towards; but after the verb to long, we must use either the word for or after, in order to convey our meaning." The quotation from Dryden singularly combines the literal and metaphorical usage.

To lengthen, to stretch or reach out for, (with earnestness, with eagerness;) and, consequentially, to desire eagerly, to wish for earnestly.
A long on me, long on you, are equivalent to—produced by me, produced by you. See ALONG.

Ac lat me speke myd my brother, vor me longeth hym to se.
R. Gloucester, p. 289.

LOOK, v. } A. S. Loc-ian; Dut. Luchten; LOOK, n. } Ger. Lug-en; to see, to be or LO'OKER. } cause to be an object of sight; LO'OKING, n. } to view; to turn or direct the eye or sight; the visual or perceptive powers;
literally and metaphorically,—

To appear or seem, or cause to appear or seem; to have or take the appearance, the aspect.
To look (with prepositions) is used as equivalent to words derived from the compounds of the Lat.
Specere; e. g.—
A looking about,—circumspection, vigilance.
To look out for,—to expect.

To look at or into,—to inspect; and, thus, to examine, to search into, to investigate.
A look or looking, forward,—prospect; backward,—retrospect.

That in her hair they look'd more gay
Than glowing in their native bed.—Prior. The Garland.

Then with a kind compassionating look,
And sighs, bespeaking pity ere he spoke,
Few words he said. Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

If it prosper not, the main weight of blame is surely laid upon him that advised the course; if you (saith the party, and say the lookers on) had not thus directed, it had not thus fallen out.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 22.

The emotions produced by tragedy are, upon this supposition, somewhat analogous to the dread we feel when we look down from the battlement of a tower.

Stewart. Of the Human Mind, c. 3

When late a simple rustic lass,

A stream was all my looking-glass
And health my only paint. Lloyd. Songs, Air 11.

LOOM, v. } The looming of a ship, the LO'OMING, n. } external form or appearance of a ship; as we say, She looms a great sail, or she looms but small,—she appears a large or a small ship, from the A. S. Leoman, (ge-leoman, whence gleam,) lucere, to shine; a word (Skinner adds) truly elegant.

Awful she looms the terror of the main.
Pye. Carmen Seculare.

LOOM. In A. S. Loma, ge-loma; Dut. Alaem, quent and necessary use. Hence Somner adds,— the heir-lome of lawyers, pro supellectile hereditaria.

Ray tells us that in Cheshire,—A loom is an instrument or tool in general. Also, any utensil, as a tub, &c. Paribusque accingitur armis, is rendered by Douglas,—“With lume in hand fast wirkand like the laif;” (working like the rest.) May it not be from the A. S. Hleom, (for so lim was also written,) that which pertains or belongs to? (See LIMB.) Thus heir-loom,— that which appertains, an appurtenance to,
the inheritance; brew-lumes, milk-lumes, wark-loom, utensils or instruments appertaining or appropriate to brewing, milking, working; and then specifically applied to a particular frame or machine.

LOOP, v. } Probably, as Skinner suggests, LOOP, n. } from Dut. Loopen, (A. S. Hleap- LO'OPHOLE. } an,) currere, to run; so called LO'OPHOLED. } because it is easily removed or slipt off from that which it binds or fastens:—a running knot is an expression of the same kind.

A loop, or loophole, is applied to the hole left by the involution of the loop; to holes of a similar form or construction; to holes in battlements or towers; to holes for escape or evasion.

Then shalt thou make loupes of jacynete coloure, alonge

The wary obviate their design:
With weighty stones o'erwhelm'd their troops below,
Shoot thro' the loop-holes, and sharp javelins throw.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. ix.

— But if those fail
Yet this uneasy loop-hol'd gaol,
In which ye're hamper'd by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y'in mind of wedlock.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

The descending tendon, when it is got low enough, is passed through a loop, or ring or pulley, in the os hyoides, and then made to ascend; and, having thus changed its line of direction, is inserted into the inner part of the chin: by which device, viz. the turn at the loop, the action of the muscle (which in all muscles is contraction) that before would have pulled the jaw up, now as necessarily draws it down.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

'Tis pleasant, through the loopholes of retreat,
To peep at such a world; to see the stir
Of the great Babel, and not feel the crowd;
To hear the roar she sends through all her gates
At a safe distance, where the dying sound
Falls a soft murmur on th' uninjur'd ear.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

LOORD. } Dr. Jamieson, who notices the Lo'URDEN. } antiquity of the etymology specified in the quotation from Verstegan, refers the word immediately to the Fr. Lourdin, and that to the Dut. Luyard, piger, desidiosus, ignavus homo, or loer, loerd, which have the same meaning, and to the latter of which Kilian traces the Fr. Lourd. Loord, lourd-en, are perhaps low-er-ed, lowerd, lowr'd, lourd, lourd-en; and thus from the same source and of equivalent meaning with lown and lowt, (qv.) It probably owes its lengthened termination, en into ane, from Verstegan's traditional etymology. See LOKD; It. Lord; Sp. Laud.

The Scotch writers use lurdanery, which is also preserved by Holinshed, (Scotland, Malcolm.) See Jamieson.

A low, debased, degraded, worthless person.

Sibriht that schrew as a lordangan lusk.—R. Brunne, p. 9.

Lo'OUSENING, n. } dismiss, or let go.

To free from its hold or fastening; to untie, to unbind, to remit, to dismiss; to relax, to separate or sever, to take away; to separate or sever, (from a close or connected state or condition,) to uncloze; to disconnect, to disengage. And thus, loose, the adj. is opposed to—fixed or fastened, tied or tight; bound or obliged; (met.) close, connected, or adhering; confined, or defined, or definite; restricted or restrained.

The expression in Shakespeare,—“at his very loose,” Mr. Steevens explains,—“at his moment of parting, i. e. of his getting loose or away from us.”

Anoon alle the doris weren opened, and the boondis of all weren loosed.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 16.

To prefer, to desire, as an object of possession or enjoyment; to delight in, to be pleased or gratified with, to take pleasure or gratification in, delight in.

LOV

Love, the noun, is applied emphatically to the passion between the sexes. Lover is, by old writers, applied as friend—by male to male. Love is much used—prefixed.

Euerest he louede hym the more, & al Englysse vor hys

Id. Epistle to Mr. Duke.

The love of good, and solicitude to procure it, is not only the ruling principle of every sentient being, but it meets with the full approbation of every rational being.
Cogan. On the Passions, c. 1. s. 3.

In peace, Love tunes the shepherd's reed;
In war, he mounts the warrior's steed;
In halls, in gay attire is seen;
In hamlets, dances on the green.
Love rules the court, the camp, the grove,
And men below, and saints above;
For love is heaven and heaven is love.
Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 3.

Forlorn of hope the lovely maid I left,
Pensive and pale, of every joy bereft:
She to her silent couch retir'd to weep,
Whilst I embark'd in sadness on the deep.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 1.

A portrait, said to be of his queen, in the Ashmolean Museum, at Oxford, conveys no idea of her loveliness, nor of any skill in the painter.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

The Revolution shewed them [the Tories] to have been, in this respect, nothing but a genuine Court party, such as might be expected in a British Government; that is, lovers of liberty, but greater lovers of monarchy.—Hume, pt. i. Ess. 9.

The Court had gone a good way beyond the fashion of the preceding reign, when the gallantry in vogue was to wear a lock of some favourite object; and yet Prynne had thought that mode so damnable, that he published an absurd piece against it, called The unloveliness of love-locks.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

LOUKE:—Skinner tells us, is said to be—a fellow receiver: Jamieson thinks Chaucer used the word as equivalent to a trull (in v. lucky.) Tyrwhitt seems to suspect it has an affinity to lush, (qv.)

And forthere n'is no thefe without a louke
That helpeth him to wasten and to souke,
Of that he briben can or borrow may.
Chaucer. The Cokes Prologue, v. 4413.

LOUNGE, v. } We owe this modern usage
LOUNGE, n. } to the old English Lungis; LO'UNGER. } (Fr. Longis; It. Longone, which Menage derives from the Lat. Longus.) a long,

To loiter about inactively.

But I will roar aloud and spare not, to the terror of, at present, a very flourishing society of people, called loungeurs, gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant, and who think they have already too much good sense of their own to be in need of staying at home to read other people's.
Guardian, No. 124.

You, my good sir, who have *lounge*d about to such good purpose as to be able to improve others, will, I hope, take your weaker brothers and sisters under your direction; and if you will make Dunn's rooms a Lounging hall instead of a chapel, I think I may venture to assure you it will be better attended in the one character than in the other.

LO'UVRE. A lover (says Minshew) or tunnel on the toppe of the house, from the Fr. L'ouvert, that is, apertus, a place open to let out the smoke.
An open place (to let in or out any thing.)
See the quotation from Holland's Plutarch in
v. Lantern.

But darknesse dred and daily night did hover
Through all the inner parts, wherein they dwelt;
Ne light'ned was with window, nor with lover,
But with continual candle light.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 11.

An envious man, having caught his neighbour's pigeons in a net, feeding on his stack, plucked off their tails, and let them go, which though they could fly forward home, yet were they soon after found dead in the dove-cote, famished for want of food, and unable to fly up perpendicularly, and so out at the lover.—Fuller. Worthies. Northamptonshire.

serves that in Dut. Be-loeren is to look with the brow or forehead drawn down, and that loeren is to contract the forehead, to frown; with us to lowre.
And Doct. Th. H. (in Skinner) that to lower is—frontem demittere; to depress the forehead.

Low, the adjective, is,—laid, recumbent; fallen,
prostrate, cast down, dejected; sunk, depressed; (met.) humble, meek, submissive; dejected, depressed, degraded, debased, demeaned.

To lower,—to humble or humiliate; to stoop, to depress, to sink, to cast down or deject, to degrade, to debase, to demean: to lower or lour, (as the sky,) consequentially, to overcloud, to darken; (as the countenance,) to draw down or contract the brow or forehead; to look sullen or gloomy, to frown.

The period in which the people of Christendom were the lowest sunk in ignorance, and consequently in disorders of every kind, may justly be fixed at the eleventh century, about the age of William the Conqueror; and from that æra, the sun of science, beginning to re-ascend, threw out many gleams of light, which preceded the full morning when letters were revived in the fifteenth century.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

So shall we in time grow senseless, not regarding the loud- est peals and rattlings of our conscience.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

Neither shal we content ourselves in lonesome tunes, and private soliloquies to whisper out the divine praises; but shall loudly excite and provoke others to a melodious consonance with us.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 8.

So when th' alarum-bell is rung
Of Xanti's everlasting tongue,
The husband dreads its loudness more Than lightning's flash, or thunder's roar.
Swift. A new Simile for the Ladies by Dr. Sheridan, (1733.)

While we are enjoying, in some favourite scene, the beauties of nature, how powerfully do the murmur of fountains, the lowing of cattle, and the melody of birds, enhance the

The sixth cause is lubrification and relaxation; as we see in medicines emollient, such as are milk, honey, mallows, &c.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 41.

For not only both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature, but there is this advantage gained from their composition, that they do mutually improve one another: for the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oyl, and the oyl preserves the mucilage from inspissation, and contracting the consistency of a jelly.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Sudden, the lucent orb drops swiftly down,
Through western skies, to shine in worlds unknown.
To the Mem. of Mr. Hughes by W. Cowper, March 28, 1720.

For, whereas it may by some be thought improper for me to call our luciferous matter a self-shining substance, in regard that it is not lucid, without the concurrence or help of the air; I answer, that I do (and justly may) employ the word self-shining, to signify, that the light our matter affords, is not a light borrowed from any external lucid, as is done by the Bolonian stone, and the phosphorus Balduini, but proceeds, as it were, from an inward principle of light.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 394.

The lucidity was constant, though the vial that contained it was kept stop'd.—Id. Ib. p. 388.

Embrace not the opacous and blind side of opinions, but to catch; and means (something, any thing) caught. Instead of saying that a person has had good luck, it is not uncommon to say, he has had a good catch." Luck, then, is simply—

A catch, a seizure; thus, the haul or drag of the fisherman would be his luck, as many fish as he would catch or take:—hap; fortune, chance, or accident.

Lucky, adj.—is usually applied, when the fortune is good; favourable, propitious.

And if to light on you my luck so good shall be,

Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, b. i. c. 46.

It is to be noted, that the trade of merchandize, being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate; other contracts not so.—Bacon. Ess. Of Usury.

The grand thing that is like to keep this experiment from being as generally useful, as perhaps it will prove lucriferous, is the dearth of sal armoniack.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 148.

And if we impartially consider the lucriferousness (if I may speak in my Lord of St. Alban's style) of the properties of things, and their medical virtues, we shall find, that we trample upon many things, for which we should have cause to kneel, and offer God praises, if we knew all their qualities and uses.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 30.

Me (humbler lot!) let blameless bliss engage,
Free from the noble mob's ambitious strife,
Free from the muck-worm miser's lucrous rage,
In calm contentment's cottag'd-vale of life.
Cooper. The Tomb of Shakespeare.

I believe every man has found in physicians great liberality and dignity of sentiment, very prompt effusion of beneficence, and willingness to exert a lucrative art where there is no hope of lucre.—Johnson. Life of Garth.

LUCUBRATION. Lat. Lucubratio, from LUCUBRATORY. lucubrare, atum; to do any thing, to study by the light (luce) of a lamp.
The word is applied, generally, without reference to the time, to—Meditation, reflections, study.

The meekest trifles I ever wrote are serious philosophical lucubrations, in comparison to what I now busy myself about.—Swift. To Pope, Aug. 28, 1731.

You must have a sober dish of coffee, and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend.
Pope. To Mr. Cromwell, Dec. 21, 1711.

By continual lucubration he [Stephens] diligently ran through all the forms of logic and philosophy, and took the degree in arts.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

LU'CULENT. Lat. Luculentus; propriè di-

LU'DICROUS. Fr. Ludicre, ludicatoire; LU'DICROUSLY. It. Ludificare, -cazione; Lat.
LU'DICROUSNESS. Ludicer, vel ludicrus, from LUDIFICATION. lud-ere, to sport or play.
LUDIFICATORY. Playful, sportive, and,
consequently, laughable or ridiculous.

Ludification,—playfulness, (in mockery or beguiling;) and consequently, trifling, mockery, deception.

But most of all those exhortations ludicrous which are grounded on the law, if the matter be utterly impossible; for exhortations carry the appearance of a serious and charitable intention, and some hope of prevailing.
Whitby. Five Points, Disc. 3. c. 11. s. 4.

Some ludicrous schoolmen have put the case, that if an asse were placed between two bundles of hay, which affected his senses equally on each side, and tempted him in the very same degree, whether it would be possible for him to eat either.—Spectator, No. 191.

To see the buffoonery or action correspond so ludicrously

LUG, v. A. S. Ge-luggian, vellere, to LUG, n. pull, pluck, or lugg. Some of LU'GGAGE, n. our countrymen at this day call the ears luggs; hence with us, aurem vellere, to pull one by the luggs, (Somner.) Sw. Lugga, crines vellere, (Ihre.) Lugs in the North of England and in Scotland, is the common name for the ears; and in the former it is a common punishment to pull them. To lug is—

To pull or drag; luggage, that which is pulled or dragged (heavily) along; and, consequently, heavy, cumbrous baggage, or package.

Ascham applies the name to a strong, heavy bow. And lugger is a vessel sailing heavily, draggingly along.

LUKE-WARMNESS. } (from wlac-ian, to warm.)
LEW. } Sometimes by pleonasm is written wlæc-warm, whence our luke-warm, (Lye.) And Tooke says, the A. S. Wlæc (our luke) is the past part. of wlac-ian, to warm or make warm: and lew, in A. S. Hlîw, hleow, is the past part. of hlîw-an, hleow-an, (to low, qv.) to warm, to cherish: to say—luke, or lew-warm, is merely saying, warm-warm; he asserts, however, that it is a modern pleonasm, and Lye produces no instance of ancient usage.

As applied (met.)—with little warmth; cool; without ardour or zeal.

But for thou art lewe, and neither could neither hoot, I schal bigynne to cast thee out of my mouthe.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 3.

All wallow'd in his own yet luke-warme blood.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

For in the evangelical justice, between the natural, or legal good or evil there is a medium or a third, which of itself and by the accounts of the law was not evil, but in the accounts of the evangelical righteousness is a very great one; that is, lukewarmness, or a cold, tame, indifferent, unactive religion.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 5. s. 4.

But thou, Patroclus, act a friendly part,
Lead to my ships, and draw this deadly dart;
With lukewarm water wash the gore away,
With healing balms the raging smart allay.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

Having scarce any [names] for the many degrees of coldness, that may be conceived to be intermediate, betwixt lukewarmness and the freezing degree of cold.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 490.

By whispering winds soon lull'd to sleep.
Milton. L'Allegro.

Whiles hounds and hornes, and sweet melodious birds
Be vnto vs, as is a nurse's song
Of lullabi, to bring her babe a sleepe.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act ii. sc. 3.

Stay but a little, till the tempest cease,
And the loud winds are lull'd into a peace.
Dryden. Ovid, Ep. 7.

Her cradle was rocked to the iambic measure, and she was lulled to sleep by singing to her an ode of Horace.
Observer, No. 109.

Leon. My lord, your stay was long, and yonder lull
Of falling waters tempted me to rest,
Dispirited with noon's excessive heat.
Young. The Revenge, Act v. sc. 2.

LUMBER, v. } Probably formed from the LU'MBER, n. } verb to lump. Skinner says, LU'MBRING, n. } supellex vilior. A. S. Ge- loma. Supellex simpliciter. It is applied to—Articles of furniture not in use or orderly arrangement, thrown together in a lump, cumbersome and bulky.

To lumber,—to move lumpishly, clumsily, or heavily along; to put together or aside as lumber, in lumps, heaps, or masses.

They lumber forth the law.—Skelton. Boke of Colin Clout.

Ye gods, what dastards would our host command
Swept to the war, the lumber of the land!
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Deep in the darkness of dull authors bred,
With all their refuse lumber'd in his head.
Mallet. Verbal Criticism.

Pensive he sat, and sigh'd, while round him lay
Loads of dull lumber, all inspir'd by pay.
P. Whitehead. State Dunces.

Away went Gilpin, and away
Went post-boy at his heels,
The post-boy's horse right glad to miss
The lumbering of the wheels.

LU'MINOUS. } ILLUMINE.) Tooke derives LU'MINOUSNESS. } the Lat. Lumen from the A. S.
Leoman, lioman, to irradiate, to glitter, to shine.
Luminary,—

That which enlightens or gives light to, which makes clear or bright; a light:—(met.) that which gives light to the understanding; one who shows or manifests brilliant powers of mind.

Thus the outwarde parte of the place lumyned the eyes of the beholders, by reason of ye sumptuous worke.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 12.

O radiant luminary of light interminable Celestiall father, potentiall God of might
Of heauen and earth.
Skelton. A Prayer to the Father of Heauen.

Whose glorious beames all fleshly sense doth daze
With admiration of their passing light,
Blinding the eyes, and lumining the spright.
Spenser. To Heauenly Loue.

And in these posting luminaries
It but a necessary care is,
And very consonant to reason
To go well clad in such a season.—Cotton. Winter.

Picht round about in order glorious,
Their sunny tents, and houses luminous.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

The contact of the air, though it were not free, did in a few days destroy the luminousness of a good phosphorus.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 370.

Thus perished Pythagoras, the Samian philosopher, founder of the Italian school, and the great luminary of the heathen world.—Observer, No. 9.

Notwithstanding the numerous objections which have been made to the validity of his [Boscovich] reasonings, none of his critics has refused him the praise of the most luminous perspicuity.—Stewart. Philos. Ess. c. 1. Ess. 2.

Piers Plouhman, p. 155.

The lumpe of fleshe twene the new borne foales eyen
To reue, that winneth from the damme her loue.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

The beares blinde whelpes, which lacke doth nayles and heare,
And lie like lumpes, in filthie farrowed wise,
Do (for a time) most ougly beastes appeare,
Till dammes deare tongue, do clear the glosed eyes.
M. C. commending the Correction of Gascoign's Posies.

The ox with lumpish pace and leisure that doth drawe, Hath respite after toil is past to fill his empty maw.
Turberville. That all Things haue Release, &c

A little leauen of new distaste doth commonly soure the whole lumpe of former merites.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 136.

And, lifting up his lompish head, with blame
Halfe angrie asked him, for what he came.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

Here sportful laughter dwells, here, ever sitting,
Defies all lumpish griefs, and wrinkled care.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 4.

Methinks, I dwell in a kind of disconsolate darkness, and a sad lumpishness of unbelieve, wanting that lightsome assurance which others profess to find in themselves.
Bp. Hall. The Comforter.

Or if his lumpish fancy does refuse
Spirit and grace to his loose slattern Muse?
Rochester. An Allusion to Horace, b. i. Sat. 10.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould.—Mortimer. Husbandry.

In life so fatally distinguish'd, why
Cast in one lot, confounded, lump'd in death?
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

— Blessed be that season, for before
I was a mere, mere mortal, and no more,
One of the herd, a lump of common clay,
Inform'd with life to die and pass away.
Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

LUNACY. } Fr. Lunatique; It. Lunatico;

These dangerous, vnSAFE lunes i' th' King,—beshrew them;
He must be told on't, and he shall.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 2.

The termes of our estate, may not endure
Hazard so dangerous as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies.
Id. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 3.

Mal. Who calls there?
Cto. Sir Topas the curate, who comes to visit Maluolio the lunaticke.—Id. Twelfth Night, Act iv. sc. 2.

Since then their good they will not understand
'Tis time to take the monarch's power in hand;
Authority and force to join with skill,
And save the lunatics against their will.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

I must convince you, not only that the unhappy prisoner was a lunatic, within my own definition of lunacy, but that the act in question was the immediate, unqualified offspring of the disease.—Erskine. Speech for James Hadfield.

of a moon-like form, or form similar to that of the moon.

They that have hereon resolved that those years were but lunary years (to wit) of a month or thereabouts, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted.

Ralegh. History of the World, b. i. c. 5. s. 5.

The Greeks observed the lunary year, that is, twelve revolutions of the moon, 354 days; but the Egyptians, and many others, adhered unto the solar account, that is, 365 days, that is, eleven days longer.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

A sort of cross, which our heralds do not dream of; which is a cross lunated after this manner.

Brown. Travels, (1685.) p. 54.

Our predecessors could never have believed that there were such lunets about some of the planets, as our late perspectives have deserv'd.—Bp. Hall. Peace-Maker, s. 10.

Now with hot blood the frozen breast she warms,
And with strong lunar dewes confirms her charms.

Rowe. Lucan, b. vi.

Where on the field the breathless corse was laid,
There full the lunar beam resplendent play'd;
And show'd each limb deform'd with many a wound.

Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. viii.

Some faithful janizaries strew'd the field,
Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes or squares,
Firm as they stood.

Watts. Lyrical Poems, b. ii.

As a complete lunation consists of about twenty-nine days and an half, and the changes of the moon are very visible, there could be no great difficulty in accommodating them to each other, or in fixing what number of days should be allowed to a month.—Priestley. On History, pt. iii. Lect. 14.

LUNCH. } Minshew derives from Sp.

LU'NCHEON. } "Lonja, a long piece, a slice, a sliver, a good cut," (Delpino.) It is not probable that we are indebted to the Spanish for the word. The origin is common to the two languages.

As applied to the refreshment between breakfast and dinner, luncheon seems to be corruptly used for nuncheon, i. e. noonshun, the refreshment taken at noon, when labourers desist from work, to shun the heat.

When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
I slic'd the luncheon from the barley-loaf.

Gay. The Shepherd's Week. Tuesday.

Some straight way said (their lungs with envy fret)
Those wanton layes inductions were to vice.

Gascoigne. A Remembrance by G. Whetstone.

And verily, the lesser that the lungs be, the swifter is the bodie that hath them.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 45.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

The lungs are so useful to us, as to life and sense, that the vulgar think our breath is our very life, and that we breathe out our souls from thence.—Ray On the Creation, pt. ii.

Two [cavities] called ventricles, send out the blood, viz. one into the lungs, in the first instance; the other into the mass after it has returned from the lungs.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

LURCH, v. } There can be no doubt that

LURCH, n. } lurk and lurch are the same

LU'RCHER. } word, varying a little in the ap-

LURK, v. } plication. It has not been satis-

LU'RKER. } factorily traced to its origin.

The Dut. Loeren, Ger. Laur-en, Sw. Lura, are explained—insidiari, oculis auribusq; insidiari, limis oculis insidiari; to lie in wait for, to lie in wait or watch with eyes and ears, with eyes askance; and in Scotch, to loure is to lurk, i. e. to lower or crouch down.

To lurch or lurk is, (thus,)—to lie or cause to lie in wait or watch; to lie in concealment: to lurch, is also to leave in the lurch, i. e. perhaps, on the watch; when further watch was useless, when the game had fled; in trouble, danger, or difficulty, to help ourselves as we may; and thus, further, to escape, when others do or cannot; to gain or win what or when others do not or cannot; to carry off the prize.

O soule, lurking in this wofull neste,
Fly forthout mine herte, and let it breste.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

— I saw in Uestars temple sit Dame Helen, lurking [latentem] in a secret place.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

I myseif sometimes, leauing the feare of heauen on the left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. sc. 2.

— His pupillage
Man-entred thus, he waxed like a sea,
And in the brunt of seuteene battailes since,
He lurcht all swords of the garland.

Id. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

Tru. Well, Dauphnie, you have lurch'd your friends of the better half of the garland, by concealing this part of the plot.—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act v. sc. 4.

And this facility we shall have above our next neighbouring commonwealth (if we can keep us from the fond conceit of something like a Duke of Venice, put lately into many men's heads by some one or other suttly driving on under that notion his own ambitious ends to lurch a crown,) that our liberty shall not be hamper'd or hover'd over by any engagement to such a potent family as the house of Nassau.

Milton. Of a Free Commonwealth.

Whilst Nero thus lurked, the senate assembled in counsaile declare him enemie of the state and punishable more maiorum, sending out to seeke him and bring him aliuie.

Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 7.

If this lawlesse lurker had ever had any taste of the civill or canon law, hee might have beene able to construe that maxime, Quod quis per alium facit; per se facere videtur.

Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. § 24.

For Love, that little urchin
About this window lurching,
Had sliely fix'd his dart.

Somerville. A dainty new Ballad.

He held it now no longer safe
To tarry the return of Ralph,
But rather leave him in the lurch.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

But lo! his bolder thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his prey the scudding lurcher flies.

Gay. Trivia, b. iii.

Believe not every flattering knave's report,
There's many a reynard lurking in the court.

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

It is in corners of our frame which seem, on a superficial view, to have the least connection with our speculative opinions, that the sources of our most dangerous errors will be found to lurk.—Stewart. Philos. Essays, Prel. Dis. c. 2.

LU'SCIOUS. } Lye suspects Luscious to LU'SCIOUSNESS. } be corrupted from Delicious.

LUSH. } Skinner,—that it is more probably from the Fr. Lousche, vin lousche, thick or unsettled wine; such wines being of exceeding sweetness. Lush, in Shakspeare, Henley asserts to mean, "rank;" and Malone, "juicy, succulent;" Golding, (quoted by the latter,) in his Ovid, translates, turget et insolida est, (sc. herba,)—lush and foggy is the blade.

Lush may be from the A. S. Lew, (q. d. lewish,) the past part. of Hleow-an, fovere, to nourish; and thus mean, nourished; and, consequentially, full of juice or succulence.

Luscious is used as equivalent to—

Delicious to an excess of sweetness.

So fashioned a porch with rare device,
Archt over head with an embracing vine,
Whose bounches hanging down seem'd to entice
All passers by to taste their luscious wine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Where Titan still unyokes his fiery-hoofed team
And oft his flaming lockes in luscious nectar steeps.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

In ancient time, there was a kind of honey, which either of the own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 847.

The mottled meadows then, new varnish'd with the sun,
Shoot up their spicy sweets upon the winds that run,
In easy ambling gales, and softly seem to pace,
That it the longer might their lusciousness embrace.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6.

Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks!

How Greene! Shakespeare. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 1.

"Is this," returns the prince, "for mirth a time?

When lawless gluttons riot, mirth's a crime;

The luscious wines dishonour'd lose their taste.

The song is noise, and impious is the feast."

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

O'er well-rang'd hives the bees shall swarm,
From which, ere long, of golden gleam

Metheglin's luscious juice shall stream.

Warton. The Progress of Discontent.

Not all the culinary arts can tame

To wholesome food, the abominable growth

Of rest and gluttony; the prudent taste

Rejects like bane such lothsome lusciousness.

LU'STRICAL. } To purify. Lustre (Lat.
Lustrum)—applied to the number of years (5)
from one lustrum or lustration to another.

Observe whether any infidel thought, any infidel lust, be lodged there [in the soul]: and when we have found this execrable thing, which hath brought all our plagues on us, then must we purge, and cleanse and lustrate the whole city for its sake.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 639.

Περικαθαριματα [filth] signifies those things that are used in the lustrating of a city among the Gentiles.
Id. Ib. 1 Cor. iv. 13. Note.

That spirits are corporeal, seems at first view a conceit derogative unto himself [the Devil], and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet hereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. xi. c. 1.

The ceremony of sprinkling holy water was a heathenish rite, used in the sanctifications and lustrations of the capitol.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

As yet three lusters were not quite expir'd,
Since I had bene a partner of the light,
When I beheld a face, a face more bright
Than glist'ring Phœbus when the fields are fir'd.
Stirling. Aurora, Son. 2.

The priests sold the better pennyworths (than the philosophers) and therefore had all the custom. Lustrations and processions were much easier than a clean conscience, and a steady course of virtue.

For the more lustrous the imagination is, it filleth and fixeth the better.—Id. Naturall Historie, § 956.

This thin contexture makes its bosom fit,
Celestial heat and lustre to transmit.

Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

Within my memory the price of lutestring is raised above two pence in a yard.—Spectator, No. 21.

But to any one who duly considers of the matter it will chymists.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 99.

Merch. When you have worn him to the bones with uses Thrust him into an oven luted well.
Massinger. A Very Woman, Act iii. sc. 1.

Putting the mixture into a crucible closely luted at the top, we kept it by a fitly graduated fire in fusion for some hours, and found, as we expected, that the remaining salt (for part would get through the lute, or commissures in the form of fumes) was turned into an alkali, of a fair blue colour.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 604.

For 'tis of a nature so subtil,
That, if not luted with care,
The spirit will work through the bottle,
And vanish away into air.

LUXATION. } of joint, or out of due place; from the Lat. Luxare.

For the surgical application, see the second quotation from Wiseman.

And if the straining or luxation of one joynt can so afflict us, what shall the racking of the whole body, and the torturing of the soul.—Bp. Hall. Heaven upon Earth, s. 16.

If thou wert laid up of the gout, or some rupture, or luxation of some limb, thou wouldst not complain to keep in; thy pain would make thee insensible of the trouble of thy confinement.—Id. The Balm of Gilead.

My feet, through wine unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a towery height,
Staggering I reel'd, and as I reel'd, I fell,
Lux'd the neck joint—my soul descends to Hell.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

The bone luxated, maketh compression on the neighbouring parts, whither it slippeth; and accordingly as those parts are of more or less sense, so are the pains and accidents that attend it.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. vii. c. 2.

When therefore two bones, which being naturally united make up a joint, are separated from each other, we call it a luxation.—Id. Ib.

Stevens. General Note on Macbeth.

MA'CKEREL. Fr. Maquereau; Dut. Mackereel; of unsettled etymology. (See Menage.) Some think—a maculis, from its spots.

These fishes, together with the old Tunies and the young, called Pelamides, enter in great flocks and skulls into the sea Pontus, for the sweet food that they there find: and every companie of them hath their severall leaders and capitaines: and before them all, the maquerels lead the way; whiche, while they be in the water, have a colour of brimstone; but without, like they be to the rest.

Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 15.

On Monday evening the butler stirring the water to take out some of the mackarels, found the water very luminous, and the fish shining through the water, as adding much to the light, which the water yielded.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 395.

Next morn they rose, and set up every sail;

The wind was fair, but blew a mackrel gale.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

This fish is easily taken by a bait, but the best time is during a fresh gale of wind, which is thence called a mackrel gale.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Common Mackrel.

MA'CROCOSM. Compounded of the Gr. Μακρος, large, and κοσμος, the world.

The quotation from Boyle explains the opposite usages of macrocosm and microcosm.

As for Paracelsus, certainly he is injurious to man, if (as some eminent chymists expound him) he calls a man a microcosm, because his body is really made up of all the several kinds of creatures the macrocosm or greater world consists of, and so is but a model or epitome of the universe.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 54.

He forms, pervades, directs the whole;

Not like the macrocosm's imag'd soul,

But provident of endless good,

By ways nor seen nor understood

Which e'en his angels vainly might explore.

Jones. An Epode. From the Tragedy of Schrab.

MACTA'TION. Lat. Mactare, atum, to slay.

Here they call Cain's offering, which is described and allowed to be the first fruits of the ground only, a sacrifice or mactation.—Shukford. On the Creation, Pref.

MA'ULATE, v. } Fr. Maculer; It. Macu- MA'ULATE, adj. } lare; Sp. Macular; Lat.
MACULA'TION. } Maculare, from macula, a spot.

To spot or distain with spots or specks; to stain.

Sayenge, that they wold not maculate the honour of theyr people wyth suche a reproche, to be saide, that they had made alliance with disars.

Sir T. Elgot. The Governour, b. i. c. 26.

— O vouchsafe

With that thy rare green eye, which never yet Beheld things maculate, look on thy virgin.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iii. sc. 1.

I speake not, be thou true, as fearing thee:
For I will throw my gloue to death himselfe
That there's no maculation in thy heart.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 4.

MAD, v. Skinner says, Gemaad, gemæd, MAD, adj. insanus, vecors. It. Matto, stultus. The older etymologists refer our Eng. Mad to the MA'DDEN, v. Greek; but do not agree upon the specific source. Serenius,— MA'DDISH. from the Goth. Mod, anger.
MA'DDINGLY. Tooke,—from the A. S. Met-an,
MA'DLY. somniare, to mete, to dream; past part. Mætt, MA'DMAN. mæd. Tooke also disputes the Greek origin ascribed to the It. Matto. The Greek derivatives (he observes) in the Italian proceed through the Latin; and in the Latin, there is nothing which resembles Matto.

Madness is popularly applied to such a disorder or disorganization, such an insanity or unsoundness of the mental faculties, as disables a man from the government of himself, or the management of his own affairs.

Mad,—insane, or unsound of understanding, disordered or distracted to the loss of reason, to a violent, furious excess; to frenzy or delirium; furious, frantic, delirious. See the quotations from Drummond and Gray.

And manye of hem seiden, he hath a deuel, and maddith; what heren ye him?—Wiclif. Jon, c. 10.

And these wordis were seyn bfore hem as madnesse and thei bileueden not to hem.—Id. Luke, c. 24.

Festus seide with greet voice, Poul, thou maddest, many lettres turnen thee to woodnesse. And Poul seide, I madde not, thou best Festus, but I speke out the wordes of treuthe and sobrenesse.—Id. Dedis, c. 26.

Festus said we a lowde voyce. Paule, y^e arte besydes thy selfe. Muche learninge hath made y^e mad. And Paul said: I am not mad, most dere Festus: but speake y^e wordes of trueth and soberness.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Sufficeth thee, but if thy wittes madde,
To have as gret a grace as Noe hadde.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3555.

For John Baptist (as they thought) was to mad to lyue so straye a life, and to refuse to be iustified therby.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 232.

But what wyl ye say if ye see mē that are taken and reputed wise, laugh much more maddelye than he?
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 73.

Lyke as a madde man yt casteth fyre brandes and shotteth deadye arrowes and dartes oute of a prenye place, euen so doeth a dissemler wyth his neyghboure.
Bible, 1551. Prouerbes, c. 26.

Dor. And is your hate so mortal?
Mary. No not to his person,
But to his qualities, his mad-cap follies,
Which still like Hydras' heads grow thicker on him.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Monsieur Thomas, Act i. sc. 2.

La. Out you mad-headed ape, a weazell hath not such a deale of spleene, as you are tost with.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

'Twas then, the madding Monarchs to compose,
The Pylian Prince, the smooth-speech'd Nestor rose,
His tongue dropp'd honey.—Tickell. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Calm, on the beach while maddening billows rave,
He gains Philosophy from every wave;
Science, from every object, round, he draws:
From various Nature, and from Nature's laws.
Savage. To John Powell, Esq.

Her mien, her shape, her temper, eyes, and tongue,

And all that's madly wild, or oddly gay,
We call it only pretty Fanny's way.
Parnell. An Elegy to an Old Beauty.

And Madness laughing in his ireful mood.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Herein seems to lie the difference between idiots and madmen, That madmen put wrong ideas together, and so make wrong propositions, but argue and reason right from them, but idiots make very few or no propositions, and reason scarce at all.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 2. s. 13.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
Their sober wishes never learn'd to stray.
Gray. Elegy.

The legislature, to prevent all abuses incident to such private custody, hath thought proper to interpose its authority, by statute 14 Geo. III. c. 49. (continued by 19 Geo. III. c. 15.) (16.) for regulating private mad-houses.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

Is it because Liberty in the abstract may be classed among the blessings of mankind that I am seriously to felicitate a mad-man, who has escaped from the protecting restraint and wholesome darkness of his cell, on his restoration to the enjoyment of light and liberty.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

MA'DAM. } Fr. Madame; It. Madonna;
MADAMOISELLE. } Sp. Madama; Lat. Mea domina.

In which [a chariot] they mean to Paris him to bring,
To make sport to their madams and their boys.
Dryden. The Battle of Agincourt.

In the colleges many of the young divines, and those in next aptitude to divinity, have been seen, prostituting the shame of that ministry, which either they had, or were nigh having, to the eyes of courtiers and court-ladies, with their grooms and madamoiselles.—Milton. Apol. for Smectym.

MA'DDER. A. S. Madre; Dut. Meed; It. Madera; which latter, Skinner thinks, may be, q. d. materia tinctoria. Minshew,—from Dut. Meeden, tingere, to tinge, to dye; but there appears no authority for such a word.

The first is madder, (rubia), in great request among diers and curriers: for to set a colour upon their wooll and leather, right necessarie. The best of all and most commended is our madder of Italie, principally that which groweth about villages neare unto our citie of Rome.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 3.

Madder also afforded something peculiar and very differing from what we have newly mentioned.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 750.

The cultivation of madder was, for a long time, confined by the tythe to the United Provinces, which, being Presbyterian countries, and upon that account exempted from this destructive tax, enjoyed a sort of monopoly of that useful dying drug against the rest of Europe.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 2.

MADEFACTION. Fr. Madéfier; Lat. Madefieri, madefacere, madefactum; to moisten, to become moist. Lat. Mad-ere; Gr. Mvδ-av; to wet, to soak.

A wetting, making or being wet.

Water, being contiguous with aire, cooleth it, but moisteneth it not, except it vapour. The cause is, for that heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance; but moisture not: and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 865.

MADGE-HOWLET. In French called Ma-chette, whence, or from Madge, for Margaret, and howlet, Skinner forms the word. See OWL.

I'll sit in a barn with Madge-howlet, and catch mice first.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act ii. sc. 2.

MA'DRIGAL. Fr. and Sp. Madrigale, It. Madriale, madrigale; also more anciently written mandriale, (Menage,) from the It. and Sp. Mandra; Fr. Mandre; Lat. Mandra, a sheepfold, or any place for sheep and shepherds to take shelter in; and thus madrigal was originally applied to chanson de berger, the shepherd's song. See Menage's French and Italian Etymologies; he derives the Lat. Mandra, from the Gr. Αντρον, a cave.

While shaggy satyres, tripping o'er the strands,
Stand still at gaze, and yeeld their sences thralls,
To the sweet cadence of your madrigals.
Broune. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

The madrigal may softer passions move,
And breathe the tender ecstacie of love.
Dryden. Art of Poetry, c. 2.

And thoughtful lovers to the winds complain,
To mitigate the madness of their pain,
Now warbling madrigals so light and gay,
Now pale and pensive the long summer's day.
Faukes. Gavin Douglas. Description of Winter.

MA'FFLE, v. } Dut. Maffelen. Balbutire, et MA'FFLER. } buccas movere. Ang. Maffle,

To stutter, or stammer.

Yet notwithstanding he deliuered his speeches by reason of his palseie, in such staggering and maffing wise, &c.
Holinshead. Ireland, an. 1532.

The familiar friends and schollers (by report) of Plato did imitate him in stooping forward: and those of Aristotle in his stammering and maffing speech.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 74.

They also abuse their power, and go too far in their commandments, (for so they be called at the wine) who enjoyne stutters, stammerers, and mafflers to sing, or bald-pates to kembe their heads, or lame creeples to go upright on their feet without halting.—Id. Ib. p. 535.

MAGAZINE. } Sp. Magacen; It. Magaz-

A store-house, a repository,—for provisions, ammunition, &c.—literary essays, or other writings.

Leaving then busy praise, and all appeal
To higher courts, sense's decree is true,
The mine, the magazine, the common weal,
The story of beauty, in Twickenam is and you.
Donne. To the Countess of Bedford.

— As when a spark

So started up in his own shape the fiend.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Thus useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace,
But less to please the eye, than arm the hand,
Still fit for use, and ready at command.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

We essayists who are allowed but one subject at a time are by no means so fortunate as the writers of magazines, who write upon several. If a magaziner be dull upon the Spanish war, he soon has us up again with the ghost in Cock-lane.—Goldsmith, Ess. 9.

MA'GOTTY. } Made, maede, maeye, which latter
Kilian (as Junius adds) derives from Maeyen, metere, depascere; to feed upon. The Dut. Mayen is from the Goth. Mat-yan or mat-gan, the third person of which is matgūh, that which eateth. And see MOTH.

Your worm is your onely emperour for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat vs, and we fat ourselfe for magots.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 3.

Out of the sides and back of the most common caterpillar, which feeds upon cabbage, cole-wort, and turnep-leaves, which we have described in the catalogue of Cambridge plants, we have seen creep out small maggots to the number sometimes of threescore or more, which so soon as ever they came forth, began to weave themselves silken cases of a yellow colour, wherein they changed, and after some time came out thence in the form of small flies with four wings.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

But I deny they are the same,
More than a maggot and I am. Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

It is confessed by all of understanding, that a magician
 (according to the Persian word) is no other than Divinorum cultor et interpres, a studious observer and expounder of divine things: and the art itself (I mean the art of natural magick) no other, Quam naturalis philosophiae absoluta con- summatio, than the absolute perfection of natural philosophy.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 11. s. 3.

And that distill'd by magicke flights,

 tion blasted the enjoyments of the happy.—Spectator, No. 19.

There dire magicians threw their mists around,
 And wise men walk'd as on enchanted ground.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

We read, in the Book of Exodus, of an express trial of skill, if we may be allowed the expression, between Moses and the magicians of Egypt, in the exercise of miraculous powers; in which the magicians were completely foiled,— not because their feats were not miraculous, but because their power, as they were at last driven to confess, extended not to those things which Moses did.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

The arts of magic were equally condemned by the public

Bp. Hall. Answer to the Vindication of Smectymnus, s. 2.

Although majesty be a term variously enough employed by chymists, and particularly used by Paracelsus to signify very different things; yet the best notion I know of it, and that which I find authorized even by Paracelsus in some passages, where he expresses himself more distinctly is, that it is a preparation whereby there is not an analysis made, of the body assigned, nor an extraction of this or that principle, but the whole, or very near the whole body, by the help of some additament, greater or less, is turned into a body of another kind.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 637.

Those who have fairly and truly examin'd, and are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess and govern themselves by, would have a juster pretence to require others to follow them: but these are so few in number, and find so little reason to be magisterial in their opinions, that nothing insolent and imperious is to be expected from them.
Locke. Of Human Understanding, b. iv. c. 16. s. 4.

I have of late years met with divers such vain pretenders, Vossius) is either from magis, greater, as minister from minus, or rather from the Gr. μεγιστος, the greatest, whence magistrates are by the Greeks called μεγισταυες. But see MAGNIFY.

Magistracy,—the office or station of magistrate,
 i. e. of one greater than, or superior to, placed over or above, in power or authority over, others in society, or social body, in a state; one appointed or invested with authority to interpret and execute the laws or some portion of them.

 I intende to cal them magistrates, lackyng an other more conuenient worde in Englyshe.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 3.

Thus far hath been considered chiefly the power of kings and magistrates; how it was and is originally the people's, and by them conferr'd in trust only to be employ'd to the common peace and benefit; with liberty therefore and right remaining in them to reassume it to themselves, if by kings or magistrates it be abus'd: or to dispose of it by any alteration, as they shall judge most conducing to the public good.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

So long therefore (for the resemblance which dominion according to his commandments they exercise the office or magistracy to which they are called.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 2. s. 2.

Both civil and religious acts study to conciliate to themselves a majesty and reverence, by habits and ornaments;
 by comely robes and costly vests; which, though they are not of the internal and essential glory which is in magistra- tick or ecclesiastick power and order, (which are both divine,) yet are so far not only convenient, but almost necessary, as they help to keep both laws and religion from contempt, and from that vulgar insolence to which seditious and atheistical humours are subject.

Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 169.

Magistrates are to govern according to those instructions of Job, c. xxix. 14. I put on righteousness, and it clotheth me; my judgment was as a robe and a diadem. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor, and the cause which I knew not, I searched out.
Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 49.

Of magistrates some also are supreme, in whom the sovereign power of state resides; others are subordinate, deriving all their authority from the supreme magistrate, accountable to him for their conduct, and acting in an inferior secondary sphere.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 2.

In all tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the right both of making and of enforcing the laws, is vested in one and the same man, or one and the same body of men.

 truths, and much desired verities.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

Though honest minds do glorifie God hereby; yet do they most powerfully magnifie him, and are to be looked on with another eye, who demonstratively set forth its magnalities;
 who not from postulated or precarious inferences, intreat a

MA'IDHOOD. } greatness, dignity, majesty; and enlarges upon the dignity and majesty which has been attributed to a state of pure virginity or maiden-hood. But it is remarkable that the A. S. Mag, maga, was a name applied to a father and to a son, and in general to relations and kindred.
Maid is in old authors written, as in the extracts from R. Brunne, Chaucer, and Gower, maie: thus following the same course of corruption as the verb mag, (i. e. may), and probably derived from
it. (See MAN.) The word is applied to—

A female child; to a female who has preserved her chastity; a virgin; to a female servant.
Maiden, adj.—pure, unsullied, unstained, unpolluted; unsullied by use or abuse, untouched, untaken; unsported, unused.
Maiden.—Warton says, "Surrey speaks loosely and poetically in making the maiden tower, the residence of the women. The maiden-tower was common in other castles, and means the principal tower, i. e. the tower of the greatest strength and defence." He produces several instances of this use of maiden, and asserts it to be a corruption of the old Fr. Magne, or mayne, great. The principal tower was also named the master-tower. See MASTER.

Mr. Nares suggests a different origin: that the tower was so called because never touched or taken; and Beauvais, he adds, on the Oise, is for that reason named La Pucelle. And, in confirmation of this, see the quotation from Hall.

This phrase, the majesty, used thus absolutely and inde-is in a very sublime and emphatical manner expressive of the supereminent glory and majesty of God. It sets forth to us in such a sense, the singular and transcendent glory of the divine majesty; as that, comparatively speaking, there is no other majesty but his.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 83.

This day [May 20, 1709] a mail arrived from Holland, by which there are advices from Paris. That the kingdom of France is in the utmost misery and distraction.

Taller, No. 18.

(20.) By the 5 Geo. III. c. 25. and 7 Geo. III. c. 50. if any person shall rob any mail, in which letters are sent by the post, of any letter, packet, bag, or mail of letters, such offenders shall be guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 17.

MAIM, v. Skinner says, perhaps from the Fr. Maymis, mutilated, me-haing, mutilation, me-haigner, to mutilate, all from the Lat. Mancus. And Menage,—the Fr. Mehaigner; It. Magagnare, from Fr. Mancer, It. Mancare, and this from mancus. But Junius thinks it is clearly formed from the reduplication of mai, in maimaitun, abscindant; from Goth. Maitan, to cut off, to amputate.

To wound, so as to disfigure the appearance of, or disable from the use of; to lame by mutilation; to mutilate. Maim, noun,—

Mutilation, defect, injury, or mischief,—in some essential particular. For the legal acceptance of maim, or mayhem, see the quotation from Blackstone.

And hii velle, and debrusede some anon to dethe
And somme ymaymed, & somme yhurt.

A man's limbs (by which for the present we only understand those members which may be useful to him in fight, and the loss of which alone amounts to mayhem by the common law) are also the gift of the wise Creator to enable him to protect himself from external injuries in a state of nature.

to effect, or be efficient, to conduce.

To cause to be in certain form or fashion, mode or manner; to form, frame, or fashion, to model; to compose or put together, to construct, to fabricate; to shape or mould.

To form or fashion; to delineate, to depicture, to describe, to represent.

To make (elliptically) sub. safe or secure,—to preserve, to secure, to keep; to make, (sub. by force or against the will,) to force, to compel: to make or compose, (sc.) verses; and a maker, (Gr. ποιητης,) a poet, good or bad; a maker, or composer, or writer, of verses, good or bad: the quality of good or bad, not essential to the thing, or the verse, made, or poetry: (see the quotations from Sidney and B. Jonson; and see POET:) to make, (sc.) way; to direct the course, to proceed, to advance.

To make or to match; i. e. to make one or more fit for another; to fit, to suit, to proportion, to correspond, to coequal: to fit or suit, in marriage. And a make, a fit or suitable companion or associate; a consort, a colleague.

To make, combined with other words, has various applications resulting from the force of such combination. Few require explanation.

To make good,—i. e. sound, or secure, or strong; to amend, to repair, to restore; to secure, to strengthen, to establish.

To make up,—(sc.) a breach; to amend, to repair, to heal, to restore; (met.) good will or kindness; and thus, to reconcile.

To make up,—(sc.) a default or deficiency; to supply, to complete or fulfil, to accomplish.

To make danger, (facere periculum,)—to make trial or experiment.

Ne malapert, ne renning with your tong.

Chaucer. Court of Love.

Therefore me thinketh that thys man is too malaperte, so bluntly to enter into God's iudgement, and geue sentence in that manner before he be called to counsell.

Frith. Workes, p. 119.

Agaynste anye of whiche twoo reuerent orders, who so be solewde vnreuerently to speake, and malapertlye to ieste and rayle, shall playe that parte alone for me.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 868.

Then he breaketh forth into open blasphemy and sayth that it behoueth vs to pray vnto saints and that God will els not heare vs, for our presumptuous malapertnesse.

Tyndall. Workes, p. 297.

And thus lion-like rising daunted the malapert orator no lesse with her stately port and maiestical deporture, than with the tartnesse of her princely checkes.

Speed. Q. Eliz. an. 1597.

All those that were present, with scornfull laughter began to iest at the herald's presumption, for that he durst so malapertlye in the king's presence honour the enemy with so high praise.—Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1539.

And thus his troubles increased euen through his owne malapertness and brain-sicknesse.—Id. Hen. II. an. 1164.

How diametrically opposite the skill of living well, and managing as a man should do, his affairs in the world, is to that mal-pertness, tricking, or violence learnt amongst school-boys.—Locke. Of Education, s. 70.

MALAX, v. Gr. Μαλασσω; Lat. Malacissare; Fr. Malaxer, to blend or beat together, as eggs; also, to soften, work, or knead unto a softness; to handle a thing until it be soft. (Cotgrave.) See MALACISSATION.

valent to dis, (qv.)

Discontented, dissatisfied, displeased.

But Huddibras, more like a malecontent,
Did see and grieve at his bold fashion;
Hardly could he endure his hardiment;
Yet still he satt, and inly did himselfe torment.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

With which she for the present was appeased,
And yeelded leave, however malcontent,
She inly were and in her mind displeased.

Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 6.

But the most tedious being is that which can unwish itself, content to be nothing, or never to have been, which was beyond the male-content of Job, who cursed not the day of his life, but his nativity; content to have so far been, as to have a title to future being.—Brown. Urne-Burial, c. 5.

The king, also, for the better securing of his estate, against mutinous and malcontented subjects, (whereof he saw the realme was full,) who might haue their refuge into Scotland, had sent a solemne ambassage vnto James the third, king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him.

They had long agone by vniuersall male-contentment of the people (proceeding from the causes aforesaid) procured a great distraction of the king's leeges heartes.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1585.

The malcontents of all the Israelites.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

As I have enemies who are apt to pervert every thing I do or say, I fear they would ascribe the laying down my paper on such an occasion [the stamp duty] to a spirit of malecontentedness.—Spectator, No. 445.

Arms cross'd, brows bent, eyes fix'd, feet marching slow,
A band of malecontents with spleen o'erflow.

Churchill. The Rosciad.

MALE, adj. } Fr. Masle; It. Maschio; Sp.
MALE, n. } Macho; Lat. Masculus, mas; the syllable male in female is corrupted through the Fr. Femelle, from the Lat. dim. Femella, a little woman. Mas is of uncertain origin: Scaliger, (De Causis, lib. iv. c. 79.) affirms that mas was a word in the ancient Tuscan contracted from mamers, and that mamers, mavors, and mars, in that language signified strong, (fortis.) (See MAN.)
Mas is opposed to femina, i. e. to that (sex) which beareth, which bringeth forth its kind, and is applied to that (sex) which causeth (the other) to bear or bring forth.

Have not ye red, for he that made men at the bigynnyng made hem male and female?—Wiclif. Mattheu, c. 19.

For ever malekynde openynge the wombe schalle be clepid holy to the Lord.—Id. Luke, c. 2.

And eke to know a female from a male.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 5704.

She sigh beastes in her kynd,
The bukke, the doo, the herte, the hynde,
The males go with the female. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

When they brought forth children they either openly slew all the males, or very secretly sent them vnto their fathers.

Stow. Memorable Antiquities, p. 20.

And so begirt the dens of those male-dragons,
That through the strongest safety, they shall beg
For mercy at our sword's point.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act i. sc. 1.

The youths are (of themselves) hot, violent,
Full of great thought; and that male-spirited dame,
Their mother, slacks no meanes to put them on.

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii.

The keeping up constantly in the world a due numerical proportion between the sexes of male and female, doth necessarily infer a superintending providence. For did this depend only upon mechanism, it cannot well be conceived, but that in some ages or other there should happen to be all males, or all females; and so the species fail.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

The glow-worm is a female caterpillar; the male of which is a fly. They might never be brought together did not this radiant torch direct the volatile male to his sedentary female.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19. s. 5.

MALE-ADMINISTRATION. Male, ill or bad, and administration, (qv.) and minister.

Bad or ill administration, management, or conduct.

I think it is manifest from the practice of the wisest nations, and who seem to have had the truest notions of freedom, that when a prince was laid aside for male-administration, the nobles and people, if they thought it necessary for the public weal, did resume the administration of the supreme power, (the power itself having been always in them,) and did not only alter the succession, but often the very form of government too; because they believed there was no natural right in one man to govern another, but that all was by institution, force, or consent.

Swift. Sentiments of a Church of England Man, s. 2.

The first and principal [high misdemeanor] is the malad-ministration of such high offices as are in public trust and employment.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 9.

Imprecations and maledictions were made, according to the custom of the Jews, against those, who should presume to add or alter any thing therein.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 1. s. 27.

We are now to have a taste of the maledicency of Luther's spirit from his book against Henry the Eighth.

Atterbury. Character of Luther.

This is the only way of averting those dreadful maledic-tions you have this day [Ash-Wednesday] heard denounced; and it is to bring men to this way, to stamp upon their souls a strong conviction of the danger of sin, and the necessity of a speedy repentance, that our church has thought fit to make use of such strong and impressive terms.

Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

Cösider our maister Christ which is the very true sonne of God, & God himselfe, & yet is hee crucified and put to death, as a seditious persö, as a malefactor.

Barnes. Workes, p. 296.

And I think yes in good faith, y^t it were very wel done, &
I wold that euery man would so do indede, that either shoulde correct heretike or any malefactor els.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 941.

— I haue heard

That guilty creatures sitting at a play,
Haue by the very cunning of the scene,
Bene strooke so to the soule, that presently
They haue proclaim'd their malefactions.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

That pompe to all a reverent awe imparts,
And strikes with terrour malefactors' harts.

Stirling. Domes-day. Fourth Houre.

He crammed them with crumbs of benefices
And fill'd their mouths with meeds of malefices.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

A third dares not venture to walk alone, for fear he should meet the devill, a thief, bee sick; fears all old women as witches, and every black dog or cat he sees, he suspecteth to be a devil; every person that comes near him is male-ficated, every creature, all intend to hurt him, to seek his ruine.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 181.

A sixth may be a preceding incapacity of marriage duties;
whether natural, or advantageous; whether by way of perpetual malefication, or casualty.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. c. 10.

For this the malefactor goat was laid
On Bacchus' altar, and his forfeit paid.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

From every species of punishment that has hitherto been devised, from imprisonment and exile, from pain and infamy, malefactors return more hardened in their crimes and more instructed.—Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. iv. c. 9.

Let us apply to the unjust, what we have said of a mischievous or maleficent nation.

Burke. On the Policy of the Allies, App.

MAL-ENGINE. Fr. Malengin, and malengineux.
Ill or evil ingine, or genius; ill or evil device, ens, (malè, ill, and vol-ens, willing, or wishing:) opposed to benevolent.

Willing or wishing, ill, injury, or mischief; feeling, bearing ill-will; malicious and malignant (applied to the will) are words equivalent in usage.

Cotgrave, in v. Malivole, is the first authority for malevolous; and Warburton (perhaps) the last.

The king willing to shew that this their liberality was very acceptable to him, he called this graunt of money a beneuolence, notwithstanding that many grudged thereat and called it a maleuolence.—Stow. Edw. IV. an. 1473.

And wheras they did slanderously object,
How that they durst not hazard to present
In person their defences, in respect
He was incens'd by some malevolent.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

The oak did not only resent his fall, but vindicate him from aspersions malevolently cast upon him.
Howell. Vocal Forest.

Nothing but the malevolence, which is too general towards those who excell, could make his company tolerated; but they, with whom he converses, are sure to see some man sacrificed wherever he is admitted, and all the credit he has for wit is owing to the gratification it gives to other men's ill-nature.—Spectator, No. 422.

It [emulation] is, indeed, frequently accompanied with ill-will towards our rivals: but it is the desire of superiority which is the active principle; and the malevolent affection is only a concomitant circumstance.

Stewart. Outlines of Moral Philosophy, § 137.

Malevolence, therefore, commences with some idea of evil, belonging to and connected with the object; and it settles into a permanent hatred of his person, and of every thing relative to him.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. § 3.

The serpent, who is described by our historian, as the most crafty of all the animals of the field, and whom the Jews, it should seem, believed to be endowed with reason and speech, and to have lived in great familiarity with man, malevolently persuaded the woman to eat of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

Geddes. Trans. of Bible, Pref.

Hitherto we see these malevolous critics keep their ground.
Warburton. On Prodigies, p. 109.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

They themselves did somewhat malice and envy his glory, to see him [Coriolanus] thus honoured and passingly praised.—North. Plutarch, p. 189.

How few are there that have truly maliceless hearts and find this entire upright affection towards their brethren attending them in their whole conversation.
Leighton. Com. on Peter, i. 22.

And without any private malicing,
Or public grievance, every good man joy'd
That virtue could come clear to any thing,
And fair deserts to be so fairly paid.
Daniel. A Funeral Poem.

Or as a castle reared high and round
By subtle engins and malitious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 8.

Maliciously repining still

Warner. Albion's England, b. viii. c. 34.

Calling together almost all the nobles of the land to Stamford on the fife and twentieth day of May, hee opened to them the malitiousness of the Londoners.
Stow. Rich. II. an. 1391.

Angelic forms, and happy spirits, are Above the malice of perplexing care:
But that's a blessing too sublime, too high
For those who bend beneath mortality.
Pomfret. To his Friend under Affliction.

Like early lovers, whose unpractis'd hearts
Were long the may-game of malicious arts,
When once they find their jealousies were vain,
With double heat renew the fire again.
Dryden. Astræ Redux.

Proud tyrants who maliciously destroy
And ride o'er ruins with malignant joy,
Humbled in dust, soon to their cost shall know
Heaven our avenger, and mankind their foe.
Somerville, Feb. 12.

Malice, on the other hand, is more frequently employed to express the dispositions of inferior minds, to execute every purpose of mischief, within the more limited circle of their abilities.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. § 3.

Malicious slander is the relating of either truth or falsehood, for the purpose of creating misery.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. iii. c. 12.

Malignity,—malice, or malevolence, ill-will, ill or evil intention or design:—ill or evil disposition or agency; harmful, pernicious, or destructive influence.

See the quotation from Cogan.

During the great rebellion, Malignant was the name given by the insurgents to the defenders of the church and monarchy, and in that sense it constantly occurs in writings of that period. See the quotation from Clarendon.

Then cometh malignitee, thurgh which a man annoieth his neighbour.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The queene and the lordes of her bloode highlye maligned the kynges kinred.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 37.

Such are evermore the unworthy wages of thiys worlde, malgnyetlye to blame men for their wel doinge.
Bale. Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 52.

Though many foes did him maligne therefore
And with unjust detraction him did beard.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 5.

Such wonder seis'd, though after heaven seen,
The spirit maligne, but much more envy seiz'd
At sight of all this world beheld so faire.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Cain's enuy was the more vile, and malignant, towards his brother Abel; because, whan his sacrifice was better accepted, there was no body to look on.—Bacon. Ess. Envy.

The minister as being much nearer both in eye and duty than the magistrate, speeds him betimes to overtake that diffus'd malignance with some gentle potion of admonishment.—Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. ii.

O Saviour abundantly justified in the spirit against all the malignances of men and devils.
Bp. Hall. The Great Mistry of Godliness, s. 7.

If he should still malignantly remaine Fast foe to th' Plebij, your voyces might Be curses to yourselues.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

I come a spie? no, Roderigo, no,
A hater of thy person, a maligner?
So far from that I brought no malice with me,
But rather when I meet thee, tears to soften thee.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act ii. sc. 2.

It was conceiued not to be an epidemicke disease, but to proceed from a malignitie in the constitution of the aire, gathered by the predispositions of seasons: and the speedie cessation declared as much.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 9.

The lighter sort of malignitie turneth but to a crosnesse, or frowardnesse, or aptnesse to oppose, or difficilnesse, or the like, but the deeper sort to envie and meere mischief.
Id. Ess. Of Goodnesse, and Goodnesse of Nature.

He will find misery enough in the distracting cares of settling an ungrounded, odious, detestable interest, so heartily, and so justly maligned, abhorred, and sometimes plottet against.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

I will not deny but that the noxious and malignant plants do many of them discover something in their nature by the sad and melancholick visage of their leaves, flowers and fruit.—Ray. Of the Creation, pt. i.

But, instead thereof, himself [Sir Richard Gourney] with great and very notable courage opposing all their fanatic humours both in the court of aldermen and at the common council, grew to be reckoned in the first form of malignants, which was the term they imposed upon all those they meant to render odious to the people.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 91.

Now, this shows the high malignity of fraud and falsehood, that in the direct and natural course of it, tends to the destruction of common life, by destroying that trust and mutual confidence, that men should have in one another.
South, vol. i. Ser. 12.

— The broad expanse of Heav'n
Their canopy, the ground of damp malign,
Their bed nocturnal.—Hart. Psalm 107 paraphrased.

Yet lest you think I really more than teach,
Or praise malignly arts I cannot reach,
Let me for once presume t' instruct the times,
To know the poet from the man of rhymes.

With hellish glee. Thompson. Sickness, b. ii.

The beneficence and generosity [of Theron], he tells us were not to be equalled: with which, and with some reflections upon the enemies and maligners of Theron, he concludes.—West. The Second Olympic Ode, Arg.

In some connexions, malignity seems rather more pertinently applied to a radical depravity of nature, and malignancy to indications of this depravity, in temper and conduct in particular instances.—Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. § 3.

MALISON. Opposed to benison or benediction, (qv.) Malediction.

& who that wille not so, gaf hem ther malisoun.
R. Brunne, p. 162.

Right so God wol yeve his malison to swiche lordeshipes as susteine the wickednesse of hir servants, but they come to amendement.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

MAL'KIN. Ritson says—is properly the dim. of mal, as wilkin, tomkin, &c. And see the notes on the quotation from Shakespeare, and Nares's Glossary.

Put on the shape of order and humanity,
Or you must marry malkin, the May lady.
Beaum. & Fletch. Mons. Thomas, Act ii. sc. 2.

— The kitchen malkin pinnes
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechie necke, Clamb'ring the walls to eye him.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 1.

He went, and ere Malkin could well lick her ear,
(For it but the next door was, forsooth,) we were there.

Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 6.

I shall less need to instance those other particularities whereby God continues, as by so many arguments of kindness, to sweeten our natures, and make them malleable to the precepts of love and obedience.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

His squire, by often malleations, hammerings, poundings, and threshings, might in good time be beaten out into the form of a gentleman.—Gayton. On Don Quixote, (1645,) p. 67.

The guide had in readiness a mallet and a chizel, where-

Relegh. History of the World, b. v. c. 3. s. 16.

No perjur'd villain nail'd on high,
And pelted in the pillory,
His face besmeard, his eyes, his chops,
With rotten eggs and turnip-tops,
Was e'er so mauld.—Somerville. Happy Disappointment.

When a man says gold is malleable, he means and would insinuate something more than this, that what I call gold is malleable, (though truly it amounts to no more) but would have this understood, viz. that gold, i. e. what has the real essence of gold, is malleable; which amounts to thus much, that malleableness depends on, and is inseparable from the real essence of gold.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 10. s. 17.

Supposing the nominal essence of gold to be body of such a peculiar colour and weight, with malleability and fus-ibility, the real essence is that constitution of the parts of matter, on which these qualities, and their union, depend.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 6. s. 6.

Tubal Cain was an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron, or the first that found the art of melting and malleating metals, and making them usefull for tools and other necessary implements.

MA'LLARD. Fr. Malart, which Skinner would derive from the Dut. Mal, lascivus, and aerd, natura, q. d. natura seu indole lascivus:
but the compound word does not exist in Dutch.
A wild drake.

The duck and mallard first the falconer's only sport
(Of river flights the chief, so that all other sort,
They only green-fowl term) in every mere abound,
That you would think they sat upon the very ground,
Their numbers being so great.—Drayton. Poly-Olb. s. 25.

MA'LTING, n. } Spelman, (in v. Brasium), malt and mealt, q. liquefactum. Wachter objects that liquefacere is not macerare, to steep or soak, but to cause to flow or become fluid, which is by no means the case with malt. Tooke derives it from mouille, the past part. of mouiller, to wet or to moisten. "Mouille, anglicized becomes mouilled, mouill'd, mould, then moult, mault, malt. Wetting or moistening of the grain is the first and necessary part, he adds, of the process in making what we therefore well term malt." This may be just, but the grain after wetting must remain to ferment, and be dried again in the kiln before it is called malt; and thus a name appropriate to an intermediate stage is used to designate the completion of the process. See BREAD, DOUGH, and LOAF.

Maltworm,—a cant term for a tipler of malt-

Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 1.

Malt is consumed, not only in the brewery of beer and ale, but in the manufacture of low wines and spirits. In the distillery of malt-spirits, both the opportunity and the temptation to smuggle are much greater than either in a brewery or in a malt-house.—Smith. Wealth of Nat. b. v. c. 2.

MA'MBLING. Perhaps Mumbling, (qv.)

Far be it from us to allow lukewarmnesse in the matters of God; a disposition which the Almighty professeth so much to hate, that he could rather be content the angell of the church of Laodicea should be quite cold, than in such a mambling of profession.
Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. ii. s. 2.

MAMMA'. Without doubt (says Skinner) the word is formed by Nature herself, since all infants of all nations begin to speak with this word, as the most easy of pronunciation; being, in fact, formed solely by the compression of the lips.

Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride,
"And who's blind now, mamma," the urchin cried,
"Tis Cloc's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
Friend Howard's genius fancied all the rest."
Prior. Venus Mistaken.

"Though none," said he, "shall yet be nam'd,
I know the felon well enough;
But be she not, mamma, condemn'd Without a fair and legal proof."—Id. The Dove.

MA'MMOCK, v. } Skinner derives from the MA'MMOCK, n. } Welsh.
Maum,—in various counties, is to handle, or smear about any thing eatable, (Grose.)
To mammoth (says Steevens) is to cut in pieces, or to tear.

Whan mamockes was your meate
With mould bread to eat
Ye would none other geate.—Skelton. Boke of Colin Clout.
Hee did so set his teeth, and teare it. Oh, I warrant how he mammoth it.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 3.

And by the hopeful hand of brave Black Edward wan Proud Poitiers, where King John he valiantly subdu'd,
The miserable French and there in mammots hew'd.

the specific source. The Lat. Vir has its application for a similar reason. See VIRILE.

Man is in common speech opposed, by sex, to woman; by age, to boy; by kind, to beast.

Manable,—equivalent to the Lat. Viripotens.

Manly, or manlike,—like a man, becoming, fitting or suiting a man; that is, strong, robust, fearless; with the courage, fortitude, dignity, of, or belonging to, man.

Man is used alone for man-servant.

Man is used in composition; manqueller,—a killer, slayer, slaughterer, &c.

Mankind,—the kind of man, is used in old writers as opposed to woman-kind; and to denote qualities opposite to feminine.

Mannish,—human, proper to the human kind;
opposed to womanish, or feminine; and when applied to woman,—not proper to woman, unbecoming her sex.

to govern, to administer; to use handily or easily,
to use.

— Oft times nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just right
Well manag'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Young men, in the conduct, and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold.—Bacon. Ess. Youth & Age.

Not adverting, that the first constitution and order of things is not in reason and nature manageable by such a law, which is most excellently adequated and proportioned to things fully settled.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 346.

Many a good husband overtakes himself; and undertakes more than his eye can overlook, or his hand sway; and therefore is fain to trust to the management of others as it speeds thereafter.—Bp. Hall. Fast Sermon, April 5, 1628.

Justice and Charitie. Justice, that requires both author-itie in the menager, and innocence in the menaging.
Id. The Impresse of God, pt. ii.

Yet, though all were blamed, none were punished for the ill managery and conduct of the expedition.
Baker. Charles I. an. 1625.

And let the goodness of the managing Rase out the blot of foul attaining quite.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

The proof is but too full and manifest from the whole manage of the late accursed rebellion.—South, vol. i. Ser. 10.

This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed.
Boyle.

I beg from you the greatest favour you can confer upon an absent person, since I repose upon your management
what is dearest to me, my fame and reputation.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis. An Account of the Poem.

His sly, polite, insinuating style
Could please at Court, and make Augustus smile:
An artful manager, that crept between
His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen.
Pope. Epilogue to the Satires, Dial. 1.

Upon pretence of his legantine power he [Wolsey] assumed the managery of all the ecclesiastical matters whatsoever.
Styke. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1530.

Throughout the whole managery of it [controversy] he [Thomas Tully] laboured under many bodily ills and infirmities.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

If the man of taste, however, will be pleased to mark how the genius of a Virgil has managed a war after a Homer, he will certainly be tired with a dozen of epic poems in the same strain.—Mickle. Dissertation on the Luciad, &c.

Are such men rare? perhaps they would abound,
Were occupation easier to be found,
Were education, else so sure to fail,
Conducted on a manageable scale.—Cowper. Tirocinium.

[Scripture] gives something more than obscure intimations, that the holy angels are employed upon extraordinary occasions in the affairs of men, and the management of this sublunary world.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Mr. Walpole (afterwards Sir Robert) was one of the managers on this occasion.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

MA'NCHE'T. Minshew derives from Maine, the hand. In Fr. Miche is a manchet, and michet, a small manchet, said (see Menage and Skinner) to be from the Lat. Mica, a small bit, a crum. Cheat, is a name given to wheaten bread, (see Nares.) and may be the same word as cate, the hard c softened into ch. But manchet itself seems to have an affinity with the Fr. Manger, to eat.
See the quotation from Holinshed.

And Salamōs fode was in one day thyrtye quarters of manchet floure, and thre score quarters of mele.
Bible, 1551. 3 Kinges, c. 4.

He hath imagined little prety thinnē mancheles, that shine thorow, and seeme more lyke to be made of paper or fine parchement then of wheate floure.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 324.

Of bread made of wheat we haue sundrie sorts dallie brought to the table, whereof the first and most excellent is the mainchet, which we commonlie call white bread; and our good workemen deliner commonlie such proportion, that of the flower of one bushell with another they make fortie cast of manchet, of which euerie lofe weigheth eight ounces into the oven and six ounces out as I have bene informed.—Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 6.

Char. Reach me the books down I read yesterday, and make a little fire, and get a manchel.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Elder Brother, Act ii. sc. 4.

Would monarchs relish what they eat;
'Tis toil that makes the manchel sweet.
Cotton. The Snail and the Gardener.

MA'NCIPATE, v. } Lat. Mancipare, i. e. ma- MA'NCIPATION. } nu capere, to take with the hand, to deliver from hand to hand. See EMAN-CIPATE.

To deliver into servitude, to subject to servitude, to enslave.

It is no marvel if those have mancipated their minds to the judgments of some whom they over-admire, and have lent their eyes out of their own heads.
Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, s. 2.

They [the Romans] fortified themselves against all incursions—and prevailed against all mankind to their mancipa- tion under them.—Waterhouse. Comment. on Fortescu, p. 187.

Such a dispensation [the Jewish] is a pupillage, and a slavery, which he [man] earnestly must desire to be redeemed and mancipated from.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

MA'NCIPLE. An officer (says Mr. Tyrwhitt) who has the care of purchasing victuals for an inn of court; and, with Skinner, he derives it from the Lat. Manceps, (see MANCIPATE.) which, in Mid-Latin, was a name given to various characters. See in Du Cange.

A gentil manciple was there of a temple,
Of which Achatours mighten take ensample
For to ben wise in bying of vitaille.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 569.

Wiclif. Mark, c. 12.

And he wold feeche a feined mandement,
And sompne hem to the chapitre bothe two,
And pill the man, and let the wench go.
Chaucer. The Freres Tale, v. 6941.

Aske whatso-else I haue to giue,
Thous maunde it for a kis.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi. c. 30.

I am commanded home: get you away:
He send for you anon,—sir, I obey the mandate,
And will return to Venice.—Shakes. Othello, Act iv. sc. 1.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

Sending their mandatory with a musqueteer to Doctor Hammond's lodging, [they] commanded him to appear before them, where the whole business was, to hear himself declar'd no orator of the University, nor canon of Christ church.—Hammond, vol. i. p. viii. Life, by Fell.

It doth not appear that he usurped more than a mandatory nomination of the bishop to be consecrated.
Abp. Usher. On Ordination.

But, oh! how weakly does Sedition build!
For lo! the royal mandate issues forth,
Dashing at once their treason, zeal, and mirth!
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Whilst all their mandates as sound law succeed,
With fools who write, and greater fools who read.
Churchill. The Candidate.

And mandates for deposing Sovereigns were sealed with the signet of "the fisherman."—Burke. French Revolution.

MA'NDIBLE. Fr. Mandibule; Lat. Mandi- bulum, (from mandere, to eat, to chew,) the chaws or jaws. See MANDUCATE.

The organs with which we eat or chew, the jaws.

The bill [of the common cormorant] is dusky, five inches long, destitute of nostrils: the base of the lower mandible is covered with a naked yellowish skin, that extends under the chin, and forms a sort of pouch; a loose skin of the same color reaches from the upper mandible round the eyes and angles of the mouth.—Pennant. British Zoology.

MANDILION. Fr. Mandil; It. Mandiglia;
Sp. Mandil. So Chapman translates Gr. Χλαῖνα,
A mantle, (qv.)

Thus put he on his arming trusse, fair shooes upon his feet,
About him a mandilion, that did with buttons meet,
Of purple, large, and full of folds, curl'd with a warme ful nap,
A garment that gainst cold in nights, did soldiers use to wrap.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

[The anthropophagi about the North Pole] use to drink out of the skulls of men's heads, and to wear the scalps, haire and all, instead of mandellions or stomachers, before their breasts.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 2.

MA'NDRAGE. } Fr. Mandragore; It. Man-
MANDRA'GORA. } dragola; Sp. Mandragora, MA'NDRAKE. } mandracula; Lat. Mandra- goras; Gr. Μανδραγόρας, from μανδρα, spelunca, and perhaps αγορεύω, to tell. Si id placet, ita mandragoras dicetur, quia indicio sit, in proximo esse mandram, vel speluncam: because it points out that a cave is near, (Vossius.)

And Ruben wente out in the wheat harvest & foude man- dragoras in the felds and brought them vnto his mother Lea.
Bible, 1551. Gen. c. 30.

In the digging up of the root of mandrage, there are some ceremonies observed: first they that go about this worke look especially to this, that the wind be not in their face, but blow upon their backs: then with the point of a sword they draw three circles round about the plant, which done, they dig it up afterwards with their face unto the West.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 13.

Many mola's and false conceptions there are of mandrakes, the first from great antiquity, conceiveth the root thereof resembles the shape of a man, which is a conceit not to be made out by ordinary inspection, or any other eyes than such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

MA'NDUCATE, v. } Lat. Manducare, from MANDUCA'TION. } mandere, to chew. Man- ducatur; quod denti resistatur.

To chew; to eat, properly with some strong action of the jaws, or, as anciently written, chaws.

It is gravel in the teeth, and a man must drink the blood of his own gums, when he manducates such unwholesome, such unpleasant fruit.—Bp. Taylor. Ser. (1653,) p. 252.

He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him; and as a necessary consequent of this spiritual manducation, (John vi. v. 54.) Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood hath eternal life.

Bp. Hall. Christ Mystical, s. 6.

That strong conceit which two of the three haue imbraced, as touching a littell, corporeall, and orall manducation of the very substance of his flesh and blood, is surely an opinion no where deliuered in holy scripture.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 67.

The sum then of Archbishop Cranmer's doctrine on this head is, 1. That John vi. is not to be interpreted of oral manducation in the sacrament, nor of spiritual manducation as confined to the Eucharist, but of spiritual manducation at large, in that or any other sacrament, or out of the sacraments. 2. That, &c.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 141.

MANE, (of horse, &c.) Dut. Maene; Ger. Maene; Sw. Maan. Minshew derives—a ma-nando, because it flows from his neck. Wachter,—from Lat. (of the Lower Ages) Minare, to lead, to guide, because the horse was guided by means of it, before the bridle was invented. Junius,—from the Gr. Mavvos, or μavvos, a kind of ornament adapted to the neck. Kilian says, that it is so named from its resemblance to the moon, whence it is called, by Martial, juba lunata, and by Catullus, rutila. May it not be from A. S. Mægen, mægn, main, strength?

—And the weake wanton Cupid Shall from your necke vnloose his amorous fould,
And like a dew drop from the lyon's mane,
Be shooke to ayrie ayre.

Shakespeare. Troilus & Cressida, Act iii. sc. 3.

This forest sometimes bredde white bulles, long maned like lyons.—Stow. A Description of England, &c. p. 3.

But when his foe lies prostrate on the plain,
He sheathes his pawes, uncurls his angry mane,
And, pleas'd with bloodless honours of the day,
Walks over and disdains the inglorious prey.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

MANGE, n. } Fr. Mangeson, also called MA'NGY. } roigne, or rongne, from roigner, MA'NGINESS. } to gnaw. (See AROYNT.) The same word as the preceding, applied (Cutem enim exedit et erodit) to—

An eating, corroding (loathsome) disease.

Whether he be blynde, lame, &c. or maunge, or skaulde, &c.—Bible, 1551. Leviticus, c. 21.

—Euer to remayne
In wretched beggery
And maungy misery.

Skelton. Duke of Albany and the Scottes.

And the Lorde wyl smite the with the botches of Egypte and the emorodes, scalle and maungynesse that thou shalte not be healed therof.—Bible, 1551. Deuteronomy, c. 28.

Which of your mangy lives is worth this hurt here?

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Knight of Malta, Act ii. sc. 1.

See. Oh, this sounds mangily, Poorly, and scurvily in a souldier's mouth.

Id. The False One, Act ii. sc. 3.

Rochester. Trial of the Poets for the Bays.

MA'NGLE, v. } Minshew and Skinner,—from MA'NGLER. } the Lat. Mancus; (Dut. Manck, Ger. Manc.) Junius,—from the Dut. Mancken, mencken, mincken, to mince. It may be a dim.
of maim, (qv.)—or from the engine called a mangonel, (qv.) in Fr. Mangonneau: and in Fr. also mangonner is "to mangle, or disfigure by mangling."

To maim; to mutilate, to lacerate, to tear to pieces. See BEMANGLE.

Tyndal shal haue no cause to saye that I deface hys gaye goodlye tale, by mangling of hys matter and rehearsing hym by patches and pecys.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 538.

Then little thinking that these came indeed
On their own mangled carcasses to feed.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

With care I rais'd on our Rhoetean coast,
A vacant tomb, and hail'd thy mighty ghost:
Thy name and arms adorn the place around;
And, had thy mangled bleeding corse been found,
Thy relics had repos'd in Trojan ground.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine,
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art.

Tickell. To Sir Godfrey Kneller.

Of Erees, but rather ylike manie,
Engendred of humours melancolike,
Beforene his hed in his celle fantastike.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1377.

Epilepsis and maniacal lunacies usually conform to the age of the moon.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra.

All their symptoms agree with those of epileptics and maniacs, who fancied they had evil spirits within them.

Farmer. Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 1. s. 8.

Now, if maniacal and epileptical distempers owe their rise to natural causes; and (so far as reason can judge) to these causes only; it is not only groundless, but absurd, to ascribe them to a supernatural influence.—Id. Ib. s. 9.

MA'NIABLE. Fr. Maniable,—manageable.
See MANAGE.

And as to the will of Man, it is that which is most mani- (Wachter.) Chaucer writes,—“a maner Latin, a maner love-drinke, a maner rime;” and our common translation of the Bible, Lev. vii. 23, reads “no manner fat;” but in ver. 26, “no manner of blood.” Applied to—

The mode or method, fashion or form; the sort or kind; occasional or customary;—to the habit or behaviour; to the general mode of action, conduct, or management; the habits, the morals.

To take in the manner,—see MAINOUR, and the quotation below from Dryden.

Mannerism is not uncommon in speech.

— And in this maner y wys

Now, Philos, see how mannerly your curre,
Your well-taught dog that hath so many trickes,
Devoures your dinner.

Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 6.

Others to amend that absurdity, and yet out of a piece of mannerliness and respect, as they think to God, though they deny this universal soul or form informing of the whole universe, yet without any sufficient ground have devised several systems of the universe.—Hale. Orig. of Man, p. 34.

This did wonderfully concerne the might and manner- hood of the kingdome, to haue fermes, as it were of a standard, sufficient to maintaine an able body out of penurie.
Bacon. King Hen. VII. p. 74.

Well may they [the Dutch] boast themselves an ancient nation;

For they were bred ere manners were in fashion:
And their new commonwealth has set them free
Only from honour and civility.

Dryden. Satire on the Dutch, (1662.)

Mufti.—I have taken you in the manner and will have the law upon you.—Id. Don Sebastian, Act i.

For songs and verses mannerly obscene,
That can stir nature up by springs unseen,
And, without forcing blushes, warm the queen.

Rochester. Horace, b. i. Sat. 10. An Allusion.

Nor thee, his [Spenser's] ancient master, laughing sage,
Chaucer, whose native, manners-painting verse,
Well moralized, shines through the Gothic cloud
Of time and language o'er thy genius thrown.

Thomson. Summer.

Then know thyself, the human mind survey,
The use, the pleasure will the toil repay.
Hence inspiration plans his manner'd lays,
Hence Homer's crown, and, Shakespear, hence thy bays.

Grainger. Solitude.

Manners are what vex or sooth, corrupt or purify, exalt or debase, barbarise or refine us, by a constant, steady, uniform, insensible operation, like that of the air we breathe in.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

As I am satisfied nothing ought to be admitted from beginning to end, which can provoke comparisons, I revolt with indignation from the idea of a lady of fashion being trammelled in the trickery of the stage, and taught her airs and graces, till she is made the mere fac-simile of a man- nerist.—Observer, No. 102.

He [Hayman] sometimes succeeded well, though a strong mannerist, and easily distinguishable by the large noses and shambling legs of his figures.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 3.

MANŒUVRE, v. } Low Lat. Manu-opera- MANŒUVRE, n. } rius, one who works with the hand; manus, and opera. Cotgrave has manœuvrer, to hold, occupy, possesse, (an old Norman word.)

Manœuvrier,—a mechanical workman or labourer, an artificer, a handicrafts-man. See Du Cange and Menage.

To do any thing handily or dexterously; cleverly or adroitly.

Sir George Rodney, who had eagerly watched and waited for this opportunity, now manœuvred the fleet with such skill, as to gain the windward of the enemy during the night, and entirely to preclude their retreat.

Belsham. History of Gt. Britain, April 8th, 1782.

The English commander wore close round upon the enemy, and actually separated their line, placing the central ships of the French between two fires. This bold and masterly manœuvre proved decisive.—Id. Ib.

Here I could not shake off old habits, so far as to resist the temptation of getting into a post-chaise for the last stage, by which manœuvre, I took the credit of having travelled like a gentleman.—Observer, No. 93.

Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 1.

When the king had given to any of them two thousand acres of land, this party purposing in this place to make a dwelling, or, as the old word is, his mansion-house, or his manor-house, did devise how he might make his land a complete habitation to supply him with all maner of necessaries Bacon. Use of the Law.

Know then, old Gripe is dead of late,
Who purchas'd at an easy rate,
Your manor-house and fine estate.

Somerville. The Night Walker Reclaimed.

A manor, manerium, a manendo, because the usual residence of the owner, seems to have been a district of ground, held by lords or great personages; who kept in their own hands so much land as was necessary for the use of their families, which were called terra-dominicalis, or demesne lands, being occupied by the lord or dominus manerii and his servants.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 6.

Hence we may conclude, that besides the church, there was a domestic or manerial chapel belonging to the old family seat at Asterlie.—Warton. History of Kiddington, p. 20.

This tenure [the right of common] is also usually embarrassed by the interference of manorial claims, under which it often happens that the surface belongs to one owner, and the soil to another, so that neither owner can stir a clod without the concurrence of his partner in the property.—Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. vi. c. 11.

(Gram. Franco-Theotisca, p. 96.) The Gr. Μανδύας was the name of a kind of military vest among the Persians; and from this word some etymolo-gists derive our mantle; others from the Gr.
ἱμάτιον: see in Junius. The most general application is to—

A cloak or coverlet; and from this application the others appear to take their origin.

A mantel to a fire-place or chimney, (see the quotations from Wotton,) to hide or cover them, and "convert even the conduits of soot and smoak into ornaments," (Wotton.)

A mantelet,—a covering, constructed for the protection of miners, besiegers, &c.

To mantle,—to cover, to cloke, to hide, to over-spread.

To mantle, (as a hawk,)—to unfold, and over-spread the wings, like a mantel, (Skinner,)

To mantle, (as fermented liquors,)—to rise and overspread (sc.) with fume or froth; to spread, to extend or expand; to spread in luxuriant growth, (as the vine,) to grow luxuriantly, to luxuriate, to wanton.

Hyre body wyth a mantel, a wympel aboute her heued.

A handy (book), or a book that may be held or carried in the hand.

I see not what would follow any more then the common verse of the compute manuell.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1111.

For their country [Arabia] was always barren and desert, wanting manual arts whereby to supply the naturals with furniture.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 20. s. 4.

What learning is that, which the seas, or Alpes, or Pyrenees, have engrossed from us? what profession either liberall, or manuary, wherein the greatest masters haue not beene at least equalled by our home-bred islanders?
Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis? s. 9.

There are some special gifts of the Spirit, which we call charismata, which do no more argue a right to the sonship of God, than the manuary's infused skill of Bezaleel and Aholiab could prove them saints.—Id. Ser. Rom. viii. 14.

Parents deprived of hands, beget manual issues, and the defect of those parts is supplied by the idea of others.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 2.

It importeth greatly the good of all men that God be

This law pointed at a true principle; that where foraine materials are but superfluities, foraine manufactures should bee prohibited. For that will either banish the superfluitie, or gaine the manufacture.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 215.

Therefore his grace prays you to take into consideration matter of trade, as also the manufacturers of the kingdome, and to repress the bastard and barren employment of moneyes, to vsurie and vnlawfull exchanges.

Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 59.

A great part of the linen manufact is done by women and children.—Maidman. Naval Speculations, (1691,) p. 312.

In places, wherein thriving manufactories have erected themselves, land has been observed to sell quicker, and for more years' purchase than in other places, as about Hallifax in the North, Taunton and Exeter in the West.

Locke. On the Lowering of Interest, &c.

A trading and manufacturing country naturally purchases of the rude produce of other countries.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 9.

By means of trade and manufactures, a greater quantity of subsistence can be annually imported into a particular country, than what its own lands, in the actual state of their cultivation, could afford.—Id. Ib.

Our woollen manufacturers have been more successful

To deliver or set at liberty, to liberate, to free from slavery or servitude, to enfranchise.

Then Valerius judging that Vindicius the bondman had well deserved also some recompence, caused him not onely to be manumitted by the whole grant of the people, but made him a free man of the city besides: and he was the first bondman manumitted, that was made citizen of Rome.
North. Plutarch, p. 85.

Long after that, and very lately, Appius, to curry favour with the common people, made it lawfull for bondmen manu- mitted, to give their voices also in elections, as other citizens did: and unto this day the perfect manumission and freeing of bondmen, is called vindicta, after the name of this Vin-dicius, that was then made a free man.—Id. Ib.

Then whereto serves it to have been enlarg'd

Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 14.

The culture and manurance of minds in youth hath such a forcible, though unseen, operation, as hardly any length of time or contention of labour can countervail it afterwards.

Bacon. On Learning, b. ii.

I must begin with capacities; for the manurement of wits is like that of soils, where before either the pains of tilling or the charge of sowing, men use to consider what the mold will bear, heath or grain.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 76.

Husbandmen to make their vines bear, manure them with vine leaves, or the husks of exprest grapes, and they observe those to be most fruitful which are so manured with their own.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

The land is manured, either by pasturing the cattle upon it or by feeding them in the stable, and from thence carrying out their dung to it.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11. p. 307.

In all farms too distant from any town to carry manure from it, that is in the far greater part of those of every extensive country, the quantity of well-cultivated land must be in proportion to the quantity of manure which the farm itself produces; and this again must be in proportion to the stock of cattle which are maintained upon it.—*Id. MAN'Y, adj. } Very variously written. Goth. Manag; A. S. Manig, mænig; ME'NIAL, adj. } Dut. Menig; Ger. Manig, manich; Sw. Menig. I believe, says Skinner, from the A. S. Ge-men-gan; Ger. Meng-en, miscere, to mix; for where many are there is a certain mixture, or medley, of men,—quædam hominum miscela. Wachter reverses this, and derives the verb mengen, to mix, from menge, multus vel multitudo; and Dr. Jamieson is convinced that the term primarily respected multitude. Tooke affirms it to be the past part. of meng-an, miscere, to mix, to mingle, and that it means mixed or associated, (for that is the effect of mixing.) subaud. company or any uncertain and unspecified number of any things. Many (Lowth) is chiefly used with the word great before it. G. Douglas (p. 153) uses the expression, "A few menyne, or menze." Many, or meine, or meinie, is applied to—

A mixture or medley, of persons, or things; a number of servants, or attendants, or followers; a company or retinue; the company or collected number of a household or family: whence the adjective menial. In the expressions many an horne, &c. Tooke considers an or a to be a corruption of, —of, many of hornes, &c. many a message, many of messages. Many, adj. consequentially—

Of or pertaining to a mixed number; numerous: of an unspecified, an indefinite or undetermined number.

MARA'UDE, v. } Menage notices the deriva-MARA'UDER. } tion of this word from a Comte Merodes, who commanded in the armies of Ferdinand II.; but Duchat shows that it existed long before. Cotgrave has marauder, to beg, to play the rogue, or idle vagabond. Skinner (in v. Marrow,) says that maraude in Fr. denotes a beggar or vagabond; and derives it, improbably enough, from the Ger. Mære, a mare, and ald, a servant; q. d. a mean servant, who takes care of horses, a groom. It is not improbably formed upon the verb, To mar.

To go on a marauding party, is to go in search of pillage or plunder.

Menage forms it from the verb varicare. (And see his Dict. Etymologique for various conjectures.
To add one more :) The A. S. Mærc, Ger. Mark, a mark or sign, is also an ensign, a standard;—to march may thus be,—to go or proceed under the same standard, in order of battle, in battle array.

To go or proceed, or cause to go or proceed, in a military form or order; to walk as soldiers walk, regularly and steadily; to make a regular progress.

MARCH. Originally the first month of the Roman year, and so named by Romulus in honour of his imputed father—Mars.

There was a certain soothsayer, that had given Cæsar warning long time afore, to take heed of the day of the Ides of March, (which is the fifteenth of the moneth) for on that day he should be in great danger. That day being come, Cæsar going into the Senate House, and speaking merrily to the soothsayer, told him the Ides of March be come. So they be, softly answered the soothsayer, but yet are they not past.—North. Plutarch, p. 613.

MARCHPA'NE. Fr. Marcepain; It. Marza- pane; Sp. Maçapan; Ger. Marzipan.

March-pane (say Skinner and Wachter) was a confection of almonds, pistachio nuts, sugar, and rose-water. All agree (says the latter) that pane is the Lat. Panis, bread, and by some said to be massa panis,—by others martius panis,—by others mixtus panis, from mischen, miscere, to mix or mingle. Steevens declares our macaroons to be only debased and diminutive marchpanes.

Which plagues them out of measure.
Drayton. Nymphidia.

MARE. A. S. Mare, mere, myre; Dut. Maere, merie; Ger. Mære, equa, and also—puella. Wachter derives mare, equa, from mar, a horse; but his etymology goes no further. Mar in Ger.; Mearce in A. S. is—mollis, tener, tactui facile ce-dens, gentle, yielding easily or readily to the hand; and mare may be so named from its gentle and tractable disposition. The A. S. Mæg is applied to maid and man, and mar, mare, equus, equa, may have the same root,—the verb to may, and be applied for similar reasons.—May, may-er, mare, mar, that which has strength, (sc.) to bear, to

MARINE, adj. Fr. Marin; It. and Sp.
MARINE, n. Marino; Lat. Marinus, from MA'RINER. mare, the sea: which Vos-MA'RINATE. sus derives from the Hebrew.
Of or belonging to the sea.

Marine, the noun,—is applied as a collective term, to naval force, or the number of ships; to

He can marinate fish and make jellies.
Howell, b. i. s. 5. Let. 36.

The invention of the mariner's needle, which giveth the direction, is no less benefit for navigation, than the invention of the sails, which give the motion.
Boyle. Workes, vol. i. p. 62.

Meantime his busy mariners he hastes
His shatter'd sails with rigging to restore;
And willing pines ascend his broken masts Whose lofty heads rise higher than before.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Why am I styl'd a cook, if I'm so loth
To marinate my fish, or season broth,
Or send up what I roast with pleasing froth.
King. Art of Cookery.

The first [factions] wished France, diverted from the poli-ticks of the continent, to attend solely to her marine, to feed it by an increase of commerce, and thereby to overpower England on her own element.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 2.

The code of maritime laws, which are called the laws of Oleron, and are received by all nations in Europe as the ground and substruction of all their marine constitutions, was confessedly compiled by our king Richard the first at the isle of Oleron on the coast of France, then part of the possessions of the crown of England.

A mark then is a sensible object which a man erecteth voluntarily to himself, to the end to remember thereby somewhat past, when the same is objected to his sense again: As men that have past by a rock at sea, set up some mark, thereby to remember their former danger, and avoid it.—Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 5. s. 1.

But on an arm of oak, that stood betwixt
The marks-man and the mark, his lance he fixt.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

The method of the Saxons was for such as could write to inscribe their names, and, whether they could write or not, to affix the sign of the cross; which custom our illiterate vulgar do, for the most part, to this day keep up; by signing a cross for their mark when unable to write their names.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20. p. 305.

A stone thrown at random must necessarily hit one object

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. i. Note on ver. 45.

MA'RRROW. This word had escaped Skinner's reading; he says that he had seen it only in the English Dictionary, and denies that it is any where used as equivalent to socius. It is a common Scottish word, and occurs in the Braes of Yarrow by Hamilton. Ray says, "A marrow, a companion or fellow. A pair of gloves are not marrows, i. e. fellows. Vox generalis." The Gloss. to Douglas (who notices the oversight of Skinner) explains thus: "An equal, fellow, associate, accomplice, companion, camrad. The word is often used for things of the same kind, and of which there are two, as of shoes, gloves, stockings: also eyes, hands, feet, &c. Either from the Fr. Camerade; Angl. Camrad, socius, sodalis, by an aphæresis, or from the Fr. Mari, a husband, Lat. Maritus, in which sense the word is also taken. Thus Scot. a husband or wife is called half-marrows, and such birds as pair are called marrows. Hence the verb Marrow, to equal, and Marrowless, that cannot be equalled, incomparable." G. Douglas renders Comes Sibylla, Sibylla his trew marrow. Sibbald says, perhaps from Fr. Mariée, a spouse. May it not rather be the A. S. Mearwu, tener, used as a term of endearment, (mearwu cild is a tender child, a tender infant,) applied to a bride for instance, then extended to a friend or fellow, a mate, and thence, to a match or pair?

Oh my deare marrowes!

MARRY, v. Fr. Marier; It. Maritar; MARRIAGE. Sp. Maridar, uxorem ducere, MARRIAGEABLE. q. d. maritare, a word, adds MARRIABLE. Skinner, which occurs in MARRYING, n. approved authors. But it is not improbable that the Lat. Mars (whence maritus) had the same origin as the Eng. Man, and maid, viz. the verb to may: — may-en, man; may-ed, maid; may-er, mar; with the article affixed — mar-is, mars, (mas.) Junius observes that the Anglo-Saxons used two words, Ceorlian, nubere viro, and Wifian, uxorem ducere. The common word in Wiclif is Wed, A. S. Weddian, spondere, to espouse. As the Fr. Marier, —

To wed, to give or take in wedlock, to join in matrimony; to be or become, to cause to be or become, husband or wife; to espouse; to unite or conjoin, (as those in the conjugal state.)

Ych wol the marie wel with the thridde part of my londe

MARSH. } Anciently written Maris, maress, MARSHY. } marish; Goth. Marisaius; A. S. Mere, mersc; Dut. Maer-asch, maersche, mersche, meersche, marse; Ger. Marsch; which Wachter derives from Ger. Mer, (Dut. Maer, mer), a collection of waters, Lat. Mare; and he might have added, Goth. Marei; Fr. Mare, marais; It. Mara, marazzo; Low Lat. Mariscus. The Goth. Marei is probably the source of all the rest, but what the original word, with a meaning to cause and account for the application? Perhaps the A. S. Mar-sian, ampliare, to extend or expand. See MERE, MOOR.

Marsh is applied to (an extent or space of) — Wet, washy, watery land; to land that remains covered with water, or that is flooded with water.

MARSHAL, n. } Etymologists agree as to MARSHAL, v. } the origin of this word with MARSHALLING, n. } the account contained in MARSHALSHIP. } the extract from Verstegan.

The word appears to have been extended from the primitive usage, curator equorum, he that had charge of horses; to curator, he that had the charge, management, provision, arrangement, of various matters assigned to him; and thus the verb is—

To manage, dispose, or arrange; to rank or set in order; to settle, to prescribe.

After the erabishop the erle marshalle Rogere
Bifore the kyng ros vp & spak tille him austere.

R. Brunne, p. 292.

— Yes, 'tis the list

Of those that claim their offices this day
By custom of the coronation.
The Duke of Suffolk is the first, and claimes
To be high steward, next the Duke of Norfolk,
He to be earle marshall.—Shakes. Hen. VIII. Act iv. sc. 1.

With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the rod of marshal-ship,
a coronet on his head.—Id. b.

In the ancient Teutonicke, mare had sometime the signification that horse generally now hath, and so served for the appellation of that whole kind, to wit, both male and female, and gelding, and so all went in general by the name of mare, as now by the name of horse. Scale in our ancient language signifieth a kind of servant, as the name of Scalco (though a Tutonicke denomination) in Italy yet doth.

Marscale, from which our now name of marshall commeth, was with our ancestors (as also with the other Germans) curator equorum, that is, he that had the charge of horses.
The French who (as we in England) very honourably es-teeme of this name of office, doe give unto some noblemen that beare it, the title of Grand Mareschal de France. And yet notwithstanding they doe no otherwise terme the smith that cureth, and shueth horses, than by the name of mare-schal.—Verstegan. Restit. of Decayed Intel. Titles of Honour.

Those long unorder'd troops so marshalled,
Under such formal discipline to stand,
That ev'n his soul seem'd only to direct
So great a body, such exploits t'effect.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

The true marshalling of the degrees of sovereign honour are these. In the first place are Conditores Imperiorum; founders of states, and common wealths; in the second place are Legislatores, law-givers; in the third place are Liberatores, or Salvatores.—Bacon. Ess. Of Honour.

Fr. Marteler,—Martus, martellus, and marteau, says Wachter; for malleus, a hammer or mallet, are from Ger. Barten, to beat, and by no means—a mar-te: what more usual than to exchange the labials? Others,—from the Lat. Martulus, a small mallet. See Menage, and the etymology suggested for the Lat. Man, in v. MARRY, ante.

Yet therewith sore enrag'd, with stern regard
Her dreadfull weapon she to him addrest,
Which on his helmet martelled so hard stood upon machines to raise their walls. It appears to be obviously the same word as Maison, a house or mansion; applied to the person who builds, instead of the thing built. The Fr. Mai- sonner, is to build houses. Massoner,—to build of stone. It is applied by usage to—

A builder in stone; masonry, work in stone;
also the solid mass of stone from the quarry.

Yf any mason ther to. makede a molde
With alle here wyse castes.—Piers Plouhman, p. 223.

About him left he no mason,

MASORAH. See the quotation from Grew.

Masorah, a certain Critica Sacra, wherein are delivered the varieties of writing and reading throughout the Old Testament, not performed by any other author, but the successive labours of many, and continued for some hundreds of years, probably begun about the time of the Mackabees, certainly before the Jerusalem Talmud, a Hebrew comment on the law; which is observed to mention some of the masoretick notes, and was first published, as saith Calvisius, in the year of our Lord 396.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 1.

Ye have an author great beyond exception, Moses; and one yet greater, he who hedg'd in from abolishing every smallest jot and tittle of precious equity contained in that law, with a more accurate and lasting masoreth, than either the synagogue of Ezra or the Galilaean school at Tiberias hath left us.—Milton. Doct. of Divorce. To the Parliament.

There shall we find, that when the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man,
One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moistening blood.

Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were dress'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes press'd.

Congreve. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

The common military sword is a heavy massive weapon,
for close engagement: wielded by a strong and skilful arm, it stabs and cuts, opens dreadful gashes where it falls, severs limbs, lops the head, or cleaves the body.

Bp. Horsley. vol. i. Ser. 7.

Rude was the pile, and massy proof,
That first uprear'd its haughty roof,
On Windsor's brow sublime, in warlike state.

Warton. Ode for the New Year, 1788.

MASS, n. } Fr. Messe; It. Messa; Sp. Messa. The word was introduced into the northern languages also. Skinner says, Bar. Lat. Missa, and Vossius, that it is undoubtedly used—a mit-tendo pro missio; the people being dismissed when the services were ended, with the words "Ite, missa est." Various other reasons are assigned for the derivation; but this seems the most probable. Tyndall (see the quotation from him) adopts the Hebrew etymology. See MISSAL.

Many nations there be even at this day, and such as enjoy peace and know not what warre meaneth, whose wealth and riches lyeth principally in mast: yea, and elsewhere in time of dearth and for want of other graine, folke use to drie their mast, grind it into meale, temper it with water, and thereof make dough for bread.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 5.

There is indeed one sort of sacrifice, which if it were true, (as it is confidently pretended) would be really an available propitiation for sin; and that is, the repeating of the great sacrifice of the death of Christ; which those of that communion now mentioned affirm to be done daily in their sacrifice of the mass. But this, the Apostle expressly tells us, is impossible.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 137.

Importing or selling mass-books, or other popish books, is by Statute 3 Jac. c. 5. § 25. only liable to a penalty of forty shillings.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 8.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

Slaughter grows murther when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war.
Dryden. Conquest of Mexico, Act v. sc. 2.

It [Jacobinism] stands chiefly upon a violation of property, massacring by judgments or otherwise those who make any struggle for their old regal government, and their legal hereditary or acquired possessions.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

In Skinner we have the etymologies of the word massacre: I think that they are all wrong, and that it comes from marti sacrum.—Jortin. Tracts, vol. i. p. 439.

Hitherto it seems we have put wax into our ears to shut them up against the tender, soothing strains of regicides, assassins, massacrers, and septembrisers.

And on the structure next he heaps a load
Of sulphur, turpentine, and mastic wood.

Garth. The Dispensary, c. 3.

MA'STIFF. Fr. Mestif, mastin; It. Mastino;
Sp. Mastin. Skinner derives from maesten, sagi-nare, to fatten, because it is a dog of a large size, and on that account appears the fatter. Minshew, —from maison tenant, because he keeps or guards the house. Manwood,—as in the quotation from Pennant.

On ther first eschel he smot in fülle hastif, & thorgh tham ilka del, als grehound or mastif.

R. Brunne, p. 189.

The mastiffe dog is voyded well that barks or ere he bite.

Turberville. To Browne of Light Beliefe.

As when an eager mastiffe once doth prove
The taste of blood of some engored beast,
No words may rate, nor rigour him remove
From greedy hold of that his bloudy feast.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embu'd,
Oft they came up, and pinch'd her tender side,
"Mercy, O mercy, heav'n," she ran and cry'd.

Dryden. Theodora & Honoria.

The next is the mastiff or ban dog, a species of great size and strength, and a very loud barker. Manwood (Forest Law) says, it derives its name from Mase the thefe, being supposed to frighten away robbers by its tremendous voice.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Mastiff.

MAT, v.

A. S. Meatta, meatte; Dut.

MAT, n.

Matte; Ger. Matte; Sw. Matta;

MA'TTRESS.

Lat. Matta, which Martinus derides from the Heb. Mittah, a bed or couch.

Wachter,—from Ger. Meid-en; A. S. Mithan, to cover. The Fr. Natte, from Lat. Matta, (Menage.) Applied to—

An intertexture or interweaving of rushes, straw, or other material. And to mat,—

To cover or protect with mat; also, to interweave into a close or thick mass; to close, thicken, or join closely into one mass.

At length I on a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was platted;
The bank with daffadillies dight
With grass, like sleeve was matted.

Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

In the skin the fibers are matted as wool is in a hat;
which is a kind of artificial skin.—Grew. Cosmo. Sac. b. i. c. 4.

Flees breed principally in straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 696.

The knotted oaks shall showers of honey weep,
And through the matted grass the liquid gold shall creep.

Dryden. Virgil, Past. 4.

Or on the mat devoutly kneeling,

Would lift her eyes up to the ceiling.

Swift. The Progress of Love.

Born of rich parentage, and nicely bred,
She lodg'd on down, and in a damask bed.
Yet fearing not the dangers of the deep,
On a hard mattress is content to sleep.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

Where Cam, meandering thro' the matted reeds,
With loitering wave his groves of laurel feeds.

Warton. The Triumph of Isis.

MATACHIN. Fr. Matachin, matassin; It.
Mattacini; Sp. Matachin. Danza de matachenes, a dance with swords, in which they fence and strike one at another, as if they were in earnest, receiving the blows on the bucklers, and keeping time; so called from Matar, to kill, because they seem to kill one another, (Delpino.) I believe, says Skinner, from the It. Matto, (mad,) from the mad gestures which the dancers use. Mr. Douce supposes the names Dance of fools (quære madcaps) and Dance of matachins to be equivalent.

The frisking fairies oft when horned Cynthia shines,
Before me as I walk dance wanton matachines.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium. Nymph. 6.

But that I'm patient, and not a choleric old teasty fool, like your father, I'd dance a matachin with you, should make you sweat your best blood for't.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Elder Brother, Act v. sc. 1.

MA'TADORE. Sp. Matador, a murderer, from matar, Lat. Mactare, to kill. At the game of ombre there are four matadores, that is, four murdering cards, so called because they win all others.

Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.

Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 3.

MATCH, n. Fr. Mèche, meiche; It. Miccia, miccio; Sp. Mecha; Low Lat. Myxa, ellychnium lucernæ, from the Gr. Μύξα, which (Vossius) properly signifies mucus, but metaphorically—ellych- num, quodque emungitur de lucernâ. Cotgrave explains the Fr. Meiche,—

The wick or snuff of a candle; the match of a lamp; also, match for a harquebuse. It is applied to—

Any unctuous or resinous substance; or a material dipped in an unctuous or resinous substance, for the purpose of speedy ignition.

—Lyght fuyr in the matche.

Piers Plouhman, p. 330.

Of the grapes which this Palma Christi, or Ricinus doth carie, there be made excellent wicks or matches for lamps and candles, which will cast a most cleare light. [Ellychnia claritatis præcipua.]—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 4.

Nor will it [the smoke of sulphur] easily light a candle, until that spirit be spent, and the flame approacheth the match.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

We took a piece of match, such as soldiers use, of the thickness of a man's little finger, or somewhat thicker.

Of such a matchless wife as I possess'd.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act v. sc. 1.

But sharp remembrance on the English part

And shame of being match'd by such a foe,

Rouse conscious virtue up in every heart,

And seeming to be stronger makes them so.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

With horns and hounds, a hunting match ordain,
And pitch their toils around the shady plain.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vii.

Or should I tell the ladies so dispos'd,

A.S. Mat-an, somniare, to dream.

To be or cause to be insensate; to stupify, to astound or astonish, to appal.

Gower, in the quotations from him, applies the word to the effects of dronkship or drunkenness.
It is written by G. Douglas—Mait and Mate. See the Glossary to his Virgil. Ruddiman derives as Mate in check-mate, supra.

Him thoughte that his herte wolde all to-breke,
When he saw hem so pitous and so mate,
That whilom weren of so gret estate.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 957.

cians, but that having got the way of reasoning, which that study necessarily brings the mind to, they might be able to transfer it to other parts of knowledge as they have occasion.
Locke. Of the Conduct of the Understanding, s. 7.

In all sorts of reasoning, every single argument should be manag'd as a mathematical demonstration, the connection and dependence of ideas should be follow'd till the mind is brought to the source on which it bottoms, and observes the coherence all along.—Id. Ib.

That of which any thing is formed or fashioned, composed, constructed, constituted; that which is subjected or supposed; (met.) a subject, an object; object in view, pursued or followed, contemplated, considered; considered or deemed, esteemed or valued—as worthy of pursuit, of gaining, acquiring, or possessing; of perceiving, knowing, or understanding. Also applied to—

The corrupt liquid secreted from a sore or wound. To matter,—to form such corrupt secretion.

To be (met.) or be deemed, considered or esteemed worthy of pursuit, of value or weight, of moment or importance; to import; to estimate or esteem; to value.

Material is used literally, and also met. (thus) pertaining to the matter or subject; important, momentous, weighty, substantial, essential.

See the quotations from Locke, Clarke, Berkeley, Stewart, and Belsham, for certain philosophical usages.

And if thou canst not tellen me anon,

Fr. Matière; It. Materia; Sp. Materia; Lat. Materies: putamus a matre dici *matte*ries, quia in corporum ratione se matris instar habet, (Vossius.) Matter is applied to,—

That of which any thing is formed or fashioned, composed, constructed, constituted; that which is subjected or supposed; (met.) a subject, an object; object in view, pursued or followed, contemplated, considered; considered or deemed, esteemed or valued—as worthy of pursuit, of gaining, acquiring, or possessing; of perceiving, knowing, or understanding. Also applied to—

The corrupt liquid secreted from a sore or wound. To matter,—to form such corrupt secretion.

To be (met.) or be deemed, considered or esteemed worthy of pursuit, of value or weight, of moment or importance; to import; to estimate or esteem; to value.

Material is used literally, and also met. (thus) pertaining to the matter or subject; important, momentous, weighty, substantial, essential.

See the quotations from Locke, Clarke, Berkeley, Stewart, and Belsham, for certain philosophical usages.

And if thou canst not tellen me anon,

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 1.

Body stands for a solid extended figured substance, whereof matter is but a partial, and more confused conception, it seeming to me to be used for the substance and solidity of body without taking in its extension and figure.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 10. s. 15.

Matter being a divisible substance, consisting always of separable, nay of actually separate and distinct parts, 'tis plain, that unless it were essentially conscious, in which case every particle of matter must consist of innumerable, separate, and distinct consciousnesses, no system of it in any possible composition or division, can be any individual conscious being.—Clarke. Letter to Mr. Dodwell.

The soul, therefore, whose power of thinking is undeniably one individual consciousness, cannot possibly be a material substance.—Id. Ib.

I deny that there is any unthinking substratum of the objects of sense, and in that acception that there is any material substance. When we attempt to explain the nature of that principle which feels and thinks and wills, by saying, that it is a material substance, or that it is the result of material organization, we impose on ourselves by words; forgetting, that matter as well as mind is known to us by its qualities and attributes alone, and that we are totally ignorant of the essence of either.—Stewart. *Of the Hum. MA'UNDER, n.

MA'UNDERING, n.

To maunder, Skinner says,

is to murmur, parum deflexo

sensu, from the Fr. Maudire:

(Lat. Male-dicere;)—Sere-nius,—from the Sw. Mana, ciere, provocare, (i. e.

the A. S. Man-ian.) But it is very probably merely a consequential usage of maund, a basket, intending,—

To bear or carry the basket, the beggar's basket, to receive the dole of charity; hence, to beg. And to maunder,—

To use the speech, or mode of speech, customary with beggars; their whine or mutter, (their cant,) either of solicitation or discontent:
hence, to whine or mutter, to grumble or complain. Mr. Grose says,—

"Maundy,—abusive, saucy. Hence maunder-ing,—Glouc."

Id. The Beggar's Bush, Act ii. sc. 1.

The maunderings of discontent are like the voyce and behaviour of a swine, who, when he feels it rain, runs grumbling about, and, by that, indeed, discovers his nature, but does not avoid the storm.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 14.

MA'UNDY. This word is applied by our old writers at the time of the Reformation to the command which Christ gave to his disciples for the commemoration of his last supper. Spelman, however, thinks that Maundy-Thursday, on the evening of which day the commmand was given,
may be so called from mande, a basket, (see ante), baskets being formerly brought on that day to receive the charitable donations of the king.

In his second parte, he treateth the maundye of Christ with his apostles vpon the sheare Thursday, wherein our Sauour actually dyd institute the blessed sacrament, and therein verily gaue hys owne verie fleshe and bloude to hys twelve apostles.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1038.

MAUSOLE'UM. } Lat. Mausoleum; Fr.
MAUSOLE'AN. } Mausolée; It. and Sp. Mausoleo. See the quotation from Pliny.

This mausoleum was the renowned tombe or sepuichre of Mausolus, a petie king of Carie, which the worthie ladie Artemisia (sometime his queene, and now his widow) caused to be erected for the said prince her husband, who died in the second yeere of the hundreth Olympias: and verily so sumptuous a thing it was, and so curiously wrought, by the artificers especially, that it is reckoned one of those matchlesse monuments which are called the seven wonders of the world.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 5.

The whole chapel called by his [Henry VII.] name, is properly but his mausoleum, he building it solely for the burial place of himself and the royal family, and accordingly ordering by his will that no other person should be interred there.

(Life spent in indolence, and therefore sad.)
With schemes of monumental fame; and sought
By pyramids and mausolean pomp,

Cowper. Task, b. v.

MA'UTHER. Ray says,—a modher, or modder, mothther, a girl or young wench; used all over the eastern parts of England, viz. Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridge; and he quotes the etymology of the word from the Dan. Moer, virgo, puella, (see MAID, or MAY.) given by Spelman in his Glossary, in v. Moer. Norfolk, from its situation, was much exposed to Danish settlers, and Spelman imagines those of Norfolk, who sprang from the Danes, preserved the word, though with a corrupt pronunciation. MA'WKING. See MALKIN. Applied to—

MA'WKINGLY. A servant who does the dirty

MA'WKISH. house-work; a dirty wench;

a slattern; one careless of cleanliness, dress or ornament. And mawkingly, mawkish,—

Tasteless, insipid, unsavoury, disgusting.

Thou tookst me up at every word I spoke,

As if I had been a mawkin.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Chances, Act iii. sc. 1.

A deformed queane, a crooked carkass, a maukin, a witch, a rotten post, an hedge stake may be set out and tricked up, that it shall make as faire a show, as much enamour as the rest.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 469.

Some silly souls are prone to place much piety in their mawkingly plainness, and in their censoriousness of others who use more comely and costly curiosities.

Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness, p. 87.

Their little breasts would burst with ire;

And the most heedless mawkin there,

The loveliest idiot drop a tear.

Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

Others look loathsome and diseased with sloth,

Like a faint traveller whose dusty mouth

Grows dry with heat, and spits a maukish froth.

Addison. Virgil, Geor. 4.

Flow, Welsted flow! like thine inspirer, beer;

Though stale, not ripe; though thin, yet never clear;

So sweetly maukish, and so smoothly dull;

Heady not strong: o'erflowing, though not full.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iii.

Any thing set up as an object of adoration: a popet or puppet, a fondling.

A temple heo fonde fair y now, and a mawmed a midde,
That ofte tolde wonder gret, and what thing mon bitide.

R. Gloucester, p. 14.

Errid mislyuyng, haunted maumetrie.—R. Brunne, p. 320.

And what consent to the temple of God with maumetis?

Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 6.

An idolastre peraventure ne hath not but o maumet or two, and the avaricious man hath many; for certes, every florene in his coffre is a maumet. And certes, the sinne of maumetrie is the first that God defended in the ten commandments, as bereth witness Exod. c. xx. Thou shalt have no false Gods before me, ne thou shalt make to thee no graven thing.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

In destruction of maumetrie

And in encrease of Cristes lawe dere,

They ben accorded so as ye may here.

Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4656.

The hole people of the world in effecte fallē from knowledge or beleue of God, unto Idolatry and worship of mammotys.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 128.

There you shall find in every corner a maumet; at everye doore a beggar; in every dish a priest.—Bp. Hall, Ep. l. Dec. 1.

And then to haue a wretched puling foole,

A whining mammot, in her fortune's tender,

To answer, Ile not wed, I cannot loue.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 5.

We charge the prelatical clergy with popery, to make them odious, tho' we know they are guilty of no such thing: just as heretofore they call'd images mammets, and the adoration of images mammety; that is, Mahomet and Mahometry; odious names, when all the world knows the Turks are forbidden images by their religion.

Selden. Table Talk. Popery.

MA'XILLARY. Fr. Maxillaire; It. Mascel-lare; Sp. Maxilla; Lat. Maxillaris, from maxilla, which is formed from masso, maxo, maxa, maxula, maxilla, (whence mala;) the jaw. (Scaliger, De Causis, L. L. c. 31.) Massare,—to reduce to one mass, to crush.

Of, pertaining, or belonging to the jaw.

For there is the skull of one entire bone; there are the teeth; there are maxillary bones, there is the hard bone, that is the instrument of hearing, and thence issue the horns.—Bacon. Natural History, § 747.

MA'XIM. Fr. Maxime; It. Massima; Sp. Maxima; Low Lat. Maxima; because it is of the greatest authority, and in greatest estimation. In like manner, axiom, from axios, dignus. There are certain legal maxims unquestioned in our courts. See Fortescue, ch. 8; and Blackstone, vol. i. p. 68.

It is a maxime held of all, knowe plaine,

Thrust nature off with forks, she'll turn again.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

There are a sort of propositions, which under the name of maxims and axioms have passed for principles and science; and because they are self-evident, have been suppos'd innate, although nobody (that I know) ever went about to show the reason and foundation of their clearness or cogency.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 7. s. 1.

Who means to build his happy reign

On this blest maxim, wise and plain—

Though plain, how seldom understood!

That to be great he must be good.

He may not spare, although he were his brother.

Id. Ib. v. 739.

Men maie recouer losse of good,

But so wise a man yet neuer stood.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

"How may a man," said he, "with idle speach

Be wonne to spoyle the castle of his health?"

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

Great joy was made that day of young and old,

And solemne feast proclaym'd throughout the land,

That their exceeding merth may not be told.

Id. Ib. b. i. c. 12.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,

Who from his study rails at human-kind;

Though what he learns he speaks, and may advance

Some general maxims, or be right by chance.

Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 1.

Yet lives there one, whose heedless eye

Shall scorn thy pale shrine glimmering near?

With him, sweet bard, may fancy die

And joy desert the blooming year.

Collins. On the Death of Mr. Thomson.

MAY, n. } Fr. May; It. Maggio; Sp. Mayo; MA'YING. } Lat. Maius; for which various ety-mologies are given. See Vossius and Martinus.
The latter prefers—a majoribus, from the growth

Some light huswife belike, that was dressed like a May-lady, and as most of our gentlewomen are, was more solicitous of her head tiers, than of her health,

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 473.

Sec, sec, O see, who here is come a mayng!

The master of the ocean;

And his beauteous Orian:

Why left we our playing?

B. Jonson, s. 13.

Now the bright morning star, day's harbinger,

Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her

The flowery May, who from her green lap throws

The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose.

Milton. On May Morning.

Tom Piper stand upon your village greene,

Backt with the may-pole.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

To greet glad nature, and the god of day,

And flowery Venus, blooming queen of May;

The songs of praise their tuneful breasts employ

Charm every ear, and wrap the soul in joy.

Fawkes. Description of May.

By this stream and the may-blossom'd thorn

That first heard his love-tale and his vows,

My pale ghost shall wander forlorn,

And the willow shall weep o'er my brows.—Mickle, s. 4.

MA'YOR. } Fr. Maiour; It. Maggiore; MA'YORALTY. } from the Lat. Major; the MA'YORESSE. } greater or principal (man or magistrate, of a city, town, &c.) In our elder authors it is commonly written Maior; upon a presumption, no doubt, that we owed the word (as Menage insists) to the Latin; but the more ancient writing was Meyer, and in Ger. and Dut. it is Meyer or Meier; and in Fr. also Maire; which Skinner derives (with Verstegan) from the verb to may, posse; whence Lat. Maj-or itself is derived. See MAJOR, and MAGNIFY; also MAY.

Intended for great Theseus nuptiall day.
Shakespeare. Mids. Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 2.

These mechanic philosophers being no way able to give an account thereof [the formation and organization of the bodies of animals] from the necessary motion of matter, unguided by mind for ends, prudently therefore break off their system there, when they should come to animals, and so leave it altogether untouched.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

I do not here take the term, Mechanicks, in that stricter and more proper sense, wherein it is wont to be taken, when it is used only to signify the doctrine about the moving powers, (as the beam, the lever, the screws, and the wedge) and of framing engines to multiply force; but I here understand the word Mechanicks in a larger sense, for those disciplines that consist of the applications of the pure mathe-maticks to produce or modify motion in inferior bodies.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 435.

The commonwealth of learning would lose too many useful observations and experiments, and the history of nature would make too slow a progress, if it were presumed, that none but geometers and mechanicians should employ themselves about writing any part of that history.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 473.

Fourthly, I very well foresee it may be objected that the chick with all its parts is not a mechanically contrived engine, but fashioned out of matter by the soul of the bird lodged chiefly in the cicatricula.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 68.

There [in the kingdom of God] virtue only gives pre-that the primary term is the Sw. Mid, i. e. middle; to meddle or to mell being merely to interpose one's self between other objects.

To mix, to mingle; to mix or mingle, interdeal, or interfere, (sc. among other people and their concerns,) to busy or be busy, to take part or share, in any thing.

A medley,—a mixture of persons, an affray.

He tok his seurd in hand, the croyce let he falle,

Id. Ess. of Great Place.

How to distinguish between medling innocently from being blameably meddlesome, hic labor, hic opus est . . .
I shall touch some cases in which it is allowable or commendable to meddle with the affairs of others; then I shall propound some general rules according to which such meddlesomeness is commonly blameable.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 21.

Neither Gyngemin thy companyon nor thou neither shall enter in there, either immediately or mediatlye, if ye exclude Christ as ye haue done hitherto.—Fryth. Workes, p. 18.

And thereupon was Warwick (by whose cast
All must be wrought) employed to mediate
A present marriage, to be had between Him and the sister of the young French queen.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

It is certain, that the immediate cause of death, is the resolution or extinguishment of the spirits; and that the destruction or corruption of the organs is but the mediate cause.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 399.

The carnall eye looks through God, at the world; the spirituall eye looks through the world, at God; the one of those he seeth mediatlye, the other, terminatively.
Bp. Hall. The Remedy of Prophaneness, b. i. s. 6.

Now, upon the birth, when the infant forsaketh the womb, although it dilacerate, and break the involving membranes, yet do these vessels hold, and by the mediation thereof the infant is connected unto the womb, not onely before, but awhile also after the birth.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 5.

And in deliv'ring it, lifts up her eyes,
(The moving'st mediators she could bring.)
And straight withdraws them in submissive wise.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

If thine angels, O blessed Jesu, desired to look into the great and deep mysterie of the gospel, their longing is satisfied in the sight of thy blessed incarnation, and the full accomplishment of the great office of thy mediatorship.
Bp. Hall. The great Mystery of Godliness, s. 11.

If it had pleased thee to have commanded Moses and Elias to wait upon thee in thy mediatorie perambulation, and to attend thee at Jerusalem, on the mount of Sion, as they did on the mount of Tabor, whom hadst thou not in a zealous astonishment drawn after thee?—Id. Ib. s. 3.

And this every true christian longs and breathes after, that these days of sin and misery may be shortened, that Christ would come in his glory, that his mediatorie kingdom being fulfilled, it might be delivered up unto the Father, and that we all might be one, as the Father is in him, and he in the Father.
Hopkins. A practical Exposition on the Lord's Prayer.

I tell you againe (with an addition of more incongruities still) that God and his diuine phisician doe still let bloud in the median vein of the heart.
Bp. Hall. Sermon to the Lords of Parliament.

It being the undeniable prerogative of the first cause, that whatsoever it does by the mediation of second causes, it can do immediately by itself without them.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

No: our church cashiers the whole article, [about the invocation of saints] as contumelious to, and inconsistent with the infinitely perfect mediatorship and intercession of Christ.—Id. vol. vi. Ser. 1.

But poetry no medium can admit,
No reader suffers an indifferent wit.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 4.

It is plain, from the form and turn of the expression, (1 Tim. ii. 5.) that his mediatorial character and office was meant to be represented as a perpetual character and office, because it is described in conjunction with the existence of God and men, so long as men exist: there is one mediator between God and men, the man Jesus Christ.
Paley, Ser. 22.

Why didst thou not, O gentle mother-queen!
As judge and mediatress stand between,
When the feed guards in mighty ambush lay?
Lewis. Statius, b. vii.

some virtue, if it be rightlie handled.
Gascoigne. To the Youth of England.

If some infrequent passenger crossed our streets, it was not without his medicated posie at his nose.
Bp. Hall. A Sermon of Thanksgiving.

Now (what is very remarkable) whereas in the same place he adviseth to observe the times of notable mutations, as equinoxes, and the solstices, and to decline medication ten days before.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 13.

That sometimes is found about the heads of children upon their birth, [the silly-how] is therefore preserved with great care, not onely as medical in diseases, but effectual in success concerning the infant and others; which is surely no more then a continued superstition.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 21.

But that which chiefly promoted the consideration of these dayes, and medically advanced the same, was the doctrine of Hippocrates.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 13.

They do make such a constitution of a mendicament, as prosecution of absurd authoritie increased the zeale of truth.—Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, c. 2.

My purpose and endeavour is, to anatomize this humour of melancholy through all his parts and species, as it is an habite or an ordinary disease, and that philosophically, medi- cinally, to shew the causes, symptoms, and severall cures of it, that it may be the better avoided.
Burton. Democritus to the Reader, p. 76.

I would here intreat farther, to what end the commers thither doo drinke oftimes of that medicinal liquor.
Holinshed. Descrip. of England, b. ii. c. 23.

He made not venom to be our poison, for neither made he death or any deletery medicament upon the earth; but so, that by a slight industry and endeavour of our own they might be turned into great pledges of his love, for the use of men against the cruelty of diseases which were in process of time to rise.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 122.

First pouring out the med'cinable bane,
The heart, her tears had rins'd, she bath'd again.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

To mend thy mounds, to trench, to clear, to soil
Thy grateful fields, to medicate thy sheep,
Hurdles to weave, and cheerly shelters raise,
Thy vacant hours require. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

And favour'd isles with golden fruitage crown'd,
Where tufted flowrets paint the verdant plain Where every breeze shall med'cine every wound.
Shenstone, Elegy 20.

The system too of those physicians who profess to follow nature in the treatment of diseases, by watching and aiding her medicative powers, assumes the same doctrine as its fundamental principle.

That fix their seats in mediocrity, Become your servile mind.—Carew. Cælum Britannic.

Mediocrity is not, according to Aristotle's definition, necessary unto virtue. One cannot love his country too well;
tho' to save that, he loseth his life.
Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

Which [syrens] notwithstanding were of another description, containing no fishy composure, but made up of man

A very mediocre poet, one Drayton, is yet taken some notice of, because Selden writ a few notes on one of his poems.—Pope. To Dr. Warburton, Nov. 27, 1742.

He [John Hughes] is too grave a poet for me, and, I think among the mediocribus [some ed. mediocrista] in prose as well as verse.—Swift. To Pope, Sept. 3d. 1735.

The most successful and splendid exertions, both in the sciences and arts, (it has been frequently remarked,) have been made by individuals, in whose minds the seeds of genius were allowed to shoot up, wild and free: while, from the most careful and skilful tuition, seldom any thing results above mediocrity.
Stewart. The Human Mind, pt. ii. s. 1.

MEDITATE, v. } Fr. Méditer; It. Meditare; MEDITANCE. } Sp. Meditar; Lat. Meditari,
MEDITATION. } quasi melitari, from the Gr.
Μελεταιν, from μελει, cura est: it is (a matter) of care; and, consequently, of thought, reflection.
To think carefully, studiously; to keep the thoughts carefully or studiously fixed upon; to dwell upon thoughtfully, considerably, contemplatively; to consider, to contemplate.

But nathless this meditation
I put it ay under correction
Of clerkes; for I am not textual.
Chaucer. The Persones Prologue, v. 7292.

“Telleth” quod he, “your *meditation*oun,

— His life religiously he spent,
And meditating Christ, thence to his saviour went.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

Alas! what boots it with incessant care
To tend the homely slighted shepherd's trade,
And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
Milton. Lycidas.

— What you do quickly,
Is not done rashly, your first thought is more Than others' laboured meditation.
Beaumont & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 1.

That day and night said his devotion:
Ne other worldly busines did apply;
His name was heavenly contemplation:
Of God and goodness, was his meditation.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

He that accustoms himself to meditate upon the greatness of God, finds those questions continually rising and stirring in his heart, how shall dust and ashes ever be able to stand before him, how shall weakness and imperfection enjoy that nature that it is at a loss even to think of, and never contemplates upon without amazement?
South, vol. x. Ser. 1.

In a word, he [whose corrupt nature is impatient of any restraint from morality or religion] will not venture his meditations upon so unwelcome and so afflicting a subject.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

Oft have I rag'd, when their wide wasting cannon
Lay pointed at our batt'ries yet uniform'd
And broke the meditated lines of war.
Johnson. Irene, Act ii. sc. 6.

It. Mediterraneo; Sp. Mediterraneo, from the Lat.
Medius, middle, and terra, the land or earth.
In the midst, situated in the midst of, surrounded by, earth or land, within land, inland.

They that haue seene the mediterranean or inner parts of the kingdome of China, do report it to be a most amiable countrey, adorned with plenty of woods, with abundance of fruits and grasse, and with woonderful variety of riuers.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 91.

As for example, he that neuer saw the sea will not be persuaded that there is a mediterranean sea.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 588.

And for our own ships, they went sundry voyages, as well to your streights, which you call the Pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantique and Mediterranean Seas.
Bacon. New Atlantis.

It is found in mountains and mediterranean parts.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

I know there is nothing more undetermined among the learned than the voyage of Ulysses; some confining it to the Mediterranean, others extending it to the great Ocean, and others ascribing it to a world of the poet's own making.
Addison. Remarks on Italy.

MEDLAR. Fr. Mesple, mesle; It. Nespola;

it is Mæd, to which Skinner would give a Greek origin.

And many homely trees there were,
That peaches, coines, and apples bere, Medlars, plummets. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And as I stood and cast aside mine eie,
I was ware of the fairest medle tree
That euer yet in all my life I sie.
Id. The Flower and the Leaf.

Thus as I mus'd, I cast aside my eye,
And saw a medlar-tree was planted nigh,
The spreading branches made a goodly show,
And full of opening blooms was every bough.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Medlars, all of them, except those great ones called Setania (which indeed are more like to apples) doe close

MEED, v. } A. S. Med; Dut. Miede, miete; MEED, n. } Ger. Miete. Junius derives the MEEDFULLY. } A. S. from the Goth. Mizdo, (z omitted,) and that from the Gr. Μισθος. Skinner prefers the A. S. Met-an, occurrere, invenire, adi- pisci; to meet; meed being that which any one meets with: deservedly, in return for service done:
or rather, perhaps,—

That which is meet, convenient, becoming, or fitting, as a reward,—in return for service done, or favour bestowed: and thus, generally, a reward or remuneration; reward deserved; desert; a payment, a donation, a bounty.

Or may it not be from the verb, to mete? And thus signify—

The measure; due or deserved; given or paid in return for service done, &c.

Mr. Steevens furnishes the instance of the verb from Heywood.

Ich habbe y holde hym in hys londe, & my mede ther of ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 54.

The name [melancholy] is imposed from the matter, and disease denominated from the material cause: as Bruell observes, Μελαγχολία, quasi Μελαίναχολη, from blacke choler. Fracastorius, in his second booke Of Intellect, calls those melancholy, whom abundance of that same depraved humour of blacke choler hath so misaffected, that they become mad thence, and dote in most things, or in all, belonging to election, will, or other manifest operations of the understanding.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 31.

But hail thou Goddess sage, and holy,
Hail divinest Melancholy,

Of philosophic Melancholy comes!
His near approach the sudden-starting tear,
The glowing cheek, the mild dejected air,
The soften'd feature, and the beating heart,
Pierc'd deep with many a virtuous pang, declare.

Thomson. Autumn.

Despair seldom breeds but in the melancholy tempers, that inclines men to be thoughtful and suspicious; or in such breasts, as have been forced into a præternatural melancholy, by conversing with unskilful spiritual guides, of an indiscreet severity, and pinning their faith upon ill managed discourses about prædestination.

South, vol. vii. Ser. 12.

When the mind is very deeply impressed with a sense of calamity, for a continuance, and the attention cannot by any means be diverted from it, the subject is in a state of melancholy. This affection manifests itself by dejection of spirits, debility of mind and body, obstinate and insuperable love of solitude, universal apathy, and a confirmed listlessness, which emaciate the corporeal system, and not unfrequently trouble the brain.—Cogan. On the Passions, § 3. c. 2.

Fr. Mémoire; Lat. It. and Sp. Memoria; Memor, from memini, pret. of the obsolete meneo, or meno; and meno from the Gr. Μεν-ειν; manere, to stay or remain. The contract μνω, from the idea of staying or remaining, is excellently well transferred (says Lennep) to the faculty of the mind, hence called memory; in which things remain securely preserved; and Locke calls memory,—The store-house of our ideas. It would perhaps be more discriminating to call the mind itself (met.) the store-house of ideas received into it; that in which such ideas remain: and memory, that faculty which brings forward or recalls such ideas as remain so stored or preserved. It is also applied, generally, to—

The keeping, preserving, retaining in mind; recollection, remembrance.

Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 212.

MEN

This laying up of our ideas in the repository of the memory, signifies no more but this, that the mind has a power in many cases to revive perceptions, which it has once had, with this additional perception annex'd to them, that it has had them before.

Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 10. s. 2.

Thus in the soul while memory prevails,
The solid power of understanding fails;
Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away.

Pope. Essay on Criticism.

That man who has tears to spend at the memorial of a lost friend, but none to shed at the thoughts of a lost innocence, a wasted conscience, and a provoked God, has but too much cause to suspect the truth of his sorrow and the goodness of his heart.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

MENAGE, n.

MENAGERY.

MENAGING, n.

i.e. To manage, (qv.) The noun (also written manege) is particularly applied to—

A menage for horses, in which horses are rendered manageable, or tractable to the rider or driver; the motion or action or succession of motions to which a horse is managed or trained.

MEN

Menage or menagery for animals,—the place where animals are kept under management, the collection of animals so kept.

I find writte in Babio,
Whiche had a loue at his menage
There was no fayrer of hir age.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

—The knight, that aye with foe
In fayre defence and goodly menaging
Of armes was wont to fight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

There is a double kinde of menage, (as I have heard,) one for service, the other for pleasure.
Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis? s. 13.

He, the rightful owner of that steede,
He well could menage and subdue his pride.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

Some people have imagined that the hint of rising pillars in the manege was taken from a contrivance of which Eumenes was the author.
Berenger. Horsemanship, vol. ii. p. 165.

In directing this manege the horseman must take care that his aids be perfectly just and exact.—Id. Ib. p. 171.

I saw here [at Inspruck] the largest manege that I have met with any where else.—Addison. Remarks on Italy.

Bible, 1551. 4 Kynges, c. 12.

Zealous hee was, and would haue all things mended,
And by that mendment nothing else he meant
But to be king, to that mark was he bent.
Mirroure for Magistrates, p. 355.

But death comes not at call, justice diuine
Mends not her lowest pace for prayers or cries.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Els, be ye sure, dearely shall abyde,
Or make you good amendment for the same:
All wrongs have mendes, but no amends of shame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Pan. Faith, Ile not meddle in't; let her be as she is, if she be faire, 'tis the better for her: and she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

Lying; telling or declaring to be true that which is not so; which the teller knows is not so; false.

MEN

They are called mendacious, lying, because many of them shall be counterfeit.
Sheldon. Mirror of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 63.

In that sense it must have the operation of mendacity; there must be a lie told in it.

State Trials. Chas. II. an. 12. John Cook.

And that we shall not deny, if we call to mind the mendacity of Greece, from whom we have received most relations, and that a considerable part of ancient times, was by the Greeks themselves termed μυθικον, that is, made up or stuffed out with fables.—Brown. Vulg. Errours, b. i. c. 6.

One who begs, asks, or seeks what he wants or needs; who craves or entreats aid, assistance, or relief from want; who begs or asks alms.

For riches and mendicities
Ben cleped two extremities.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And for there hath ben great discord,
As many a wight may beare record,
Upon the estate of mendicience,
I woll shortly in your presence,
Tell how a man may begge at need,
That hath not wherewith him to feed. Id. Ib.

Therefore we mendians, we sely freres,
Ben wedded to pouertie and continence.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7494.

And but for that, whatever he may vaunt,
Who knows a monk had been mendicant.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 1.

Suidas is silent herein, Sedrenus and Zonaras, two grave and punctual authors, delivering only the confiscation of his goods, omit the history of his [Belisarius] mendication.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.

Fast by, a meagre mendicant we find,
Whose russet rags hang fluttering in the wind:
Years bow his back, a staff supports his tread,
And soft, white hairs shade thin his palsy'd head.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 5.

—What is station high?
'Tis a proud mendicant; it boasts and begs;
It begs an alms of homage from the throng,
And oft the throng denies its charity.

ME'NSTRUOUS. } suale; Sp. Mensual; Lat.
ME'NSTRUE. } Menstrualis, menstruus, monthly, of or pertaining to a month (mensis.)

Menstruum,—as in the citation from Brown, is used by chemical writers for any liquor which is a dissolvent, because its action was, for the most part, as we are told, assisted by a moderate fire during a month.

Our vniuersall ryghteousnesses are afore God as clothes stayned with menstrue.—Bale. Apology, fol. 57.

The wyld beasts shall go their way, and the menstruous women shal beare monsters.—Bible, 1551. Esdras, c. 5.

Note; that the dissents of the menstrual or strong waters may hinder the incorporation as well as the dissents of the metals themselves.—Bacon. Physiological Remains.

That women are menstruant, and men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Briefly, it consisteth of parts so far from an icie dissolution, that powerful menstruums are made for its emollition.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

MENSURA'TION. } From Lat. Mensura.
MENSURABI'LITY. } See MEASURE.
Measurement; calculation of bulk or quantity.

The measure which he would have others mete out to himself, is the standard whereby he desires to be tried in his mensurations to all other.—Bp. Hall. The Christian, s. 2.

In other words, the common quality which characterizes all of them is their mensurability.—Reid. Ess. On Quantity.

MENT, ter. Common to us with the French (says Wallis); and derived from the Latin words in men and mentum, or formed in imitation of them. The Lat. is probably from the A. S. Man-an, (man-ed, mean'd, ment;) to mean or mind, or have in mind, (mens) to put in mind, (monere); to intend, to design, to wish or will. Vossius explains,—Monumentum aliquid scriptum aut factum memoriæ causa: and Regimen,—any thing meant, intended, or designed, as a rule or regulation. See MONEY, and MENTAL.

MENTAL. } Fr. Mental; It. Mentale; Sp.
ME'NTALLY. } Mental, from the Lat. Mens, the mind, (qv.) Mental is one of those adjectived signs which we have borrowed from the Latin, without borrowing the unadjectived sign. Mens is from Gr. Mevos, impetus, (sc.) animi, and hence, animus. Mevos,—from μεν-ειν, manere, to remain. (See Vossius and Lenep.) May not the A. S. Mæn-an, be the radical word? See TO MEAN. See also MEMORY.

Of or pertaining to the mind.

Without all mental representations, conceive of your God purely, simply, spiritually; as of an absolute being, without forme, without matter, without composition; yea an infinite, without all limit of thoughts.
Bp. Hall, Epist. 7. Dec. 4.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
Even to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam now enforc't to close his eyes,
Sunk down and all his spirits became intransit.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The continuation of these two motions of the earth, the annual and diurnal, upon axes not parallel, is resolvable into nothing but a final and mental cause, or the το βελτιστον,—because it was best it should be so; the variety of the seasons of the year depending thereupon.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

I pretended not to determine, whether or no body or matter be so perpetually divisible, that there is no assignable portion of matter so minute that it may not at least, mentally, (to borrow a school-term) be further divided into still lesser and lesser parts.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 401.

Motion upwards, on the other hand, and perhaps still more, whatever is able to oppose an adequate resistance to a superincumbent weight, or to a descending shock, furnishes, for reasons hereafter to be explained, the most appropriate images subservient to that modification of the sublime, which arises from a strong expression of mental energy.—Stewart. Philosophical Essays, c. 3. Essay 2.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 205.

For God forbid I should my papers blot
 With mercenary lines, with servile pen;
 Praising virtues in them that have them not,
 Basely attending on the hopes of men.—Daniel, son. 55.

This is to show, both how tyranny grows to stand in need of mercenary soldiers, and how those mercenaries are, by mutual obligation, firmly assured unto the tyrant.

Ralegh. History of the World, b. v. c. 2. s. 2.

Thus needy wits a vile revenue made,
 And verse became a mercenary trade.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 4.

Fifthly, it [charity] casts out all mercenaryness, and self-

MERCIFY, v. } Lat. Merciare, amerciare.

Nor. Fr. Amercier, to amerce, to merce, or to mercy, to impose or exact a recompense, to impose a fine: and, as fines were accepted in commutation for life forfeited to the law, or over which power had been obtained in battle; to mercy, to grant mercy, that is, to grant that mercy or fine should be imposed and received as a ransom for life forfeited, was benefit or beneficence to the party to whom the punishment of death was remitted; and was ascribed to—benevolence or willingness to spare and save,—to—clemency, kindness, compassion, pity. (See Caseneuve in Ménage.) Further, to cry mercy, in our old chronicles, is to cry ran- som; which was acceded to or not, "according as it fortun'd to fall in the handes of them that were cruel or courtesse." Courtesy, aided by covetousness, commonly prevailed, for mercy paid in ransom was an important portion of the booty in the constant predatory scrimysshes, recorded (by Froissart especially;) there was nothing gained by slaughter. Thus to cry mercy, was (consequently) to beg for life; and to grant mercy, was to spare life; and, as this forbearance was attributed wholly to courtesy, and covetousness allowed no share in it,—hence the general application of mercy, to—

A willingness to spare and save, to pardon and forgive; to kindness, clemency, compassion, sympathy, pity.

Minshaw produces from an old statute of Henry VI. the expression,—“to be in grievous mercie of the king, i. e. to be in hazard of a great penaltie.” And yet by our law writers mercie is retranslated into the Lat. Misericordia. To be in mercy, (see the quotation from Blackstone,) is to be “under fine.” To merce, see To AMERCE.

Id. Sermon preached at Westminster, April 5, 1628.

As deliverance out of temptation is undoubtedly one of the greatest mercies that God vouchsafes his people in this world, so there is nothing that more enhances and sets off the greatness of the mercy, than the critical time of God's vouchsafing it.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

Fell in the weeping brooke, her cloaths spread wide,
And mermaid-like, awhile they bore her vp.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 7.

And as for the meremaidens called Nereides, it is no fabulous tale that goeth of them: for looke how painters draw them, so they are indeed: only their bodie is rough and skaled all over, even in those parts wherein they resemble a woman. I am able to bring forth for mine authors divers knights of Rome right worshipfull persons and of good credite, who testifie that in the coast of the Spanish Ocean neare unto Gades, they haue scene a mereman [marinum hominem] in every respect resembling a man as perfectly in all parts of the bodie as might bee.

Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 5.

MERRY. A. S. Myrig, mirige, hiliaris, jucundus, lætus; A. S. Myrth, hiliaritas, jucunditas, lætitia. Skinner derives from the Ger. Mehren, augere, to magnify or dilate. Junius,—from the Gr. Myri-zeiv, to anoint, because the ancients anointed themselves at public festivities. Tooke derives from the Goth. Mer-yan; A. S. Merran, mirran, myrran, to dissipate, to disperse, to spread abroad, to scatter; and of this verb, he affirms mirth to be the third person, and to mean,—

“That which dissipateth, viz. care, sorrow, melancholy.” (See To MAR.) It is now consequentially applied to—

A lightness, airiness, hilarity of spirit; free from all care or trouble, all seriousness or sadness; formerly, also, to a calmer feeling of pleasure or pleasantness, cheeriness, or cheerfulness. And merry,—

Pleasing, agreeable, cheerful or cheering; gay, jovial, laughing; loving or inclined to laughter, laughable.

Milton's epithet, most melancholy, applied to the nightingale, is evidently in correspondence with the context—alluding to the metamorphosis of Philomela into that bird. He imagines her singing—“in her sweetest, saddest plight.” Chaucer's “merry bird” is the true English songstress, rattling out her notes, and, like the lark, though at different hours, “startling the dull night;” or even like the cock, who with “lively din, scatters the rear of darkness thin.” Such also was Chaucer's Chaunticlere: “His vois merier than the mery organ.” Milton might have prefixed the adj. merry—“to the hounds and horn,” which “cheerly rouse the slumbering morn.”

Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. vii.

ME'SLINE. This word is variously written maslin, mastline, mesline, and by Bacon misselane;
and his authority has suggested miscellane, Lat.
Miscellaneus, to be the true word. Hall writes misceline and mesline. It is more probably the Fr.
Meslinge or meslange, a medley or mixture, from the verb meslanger, mesler, to meddle or mix. The Dutch have Misschteluyt, from mischelen, to mix.
A medley or mixture, (sc.) of corn, metal, &c.

Hen. It must not be iron, for quicksilver is the tyrant of metals, and will soon fret it.

Hen. Nor brass, nor copper, nor mastlin, nor mineral.
Brewer. Lingua, Act iv. sc. 1.

Herevnto likewise, because it is drie and brickle in the working (for it will hardlie be made vp handsomelie into loaves) some adde a portion of rie meale in our time, whereby the rough drinesse or drie roughnes therof is somewhat qualified, and then it is named miscelin, that is, bread made of mingled corne.—Holinshed. Descrip. of Eng. b. ii. c. 6.

Take thee, therefore, all kinds of grain, wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and fitches, and put them all together, and make bread of this mesline, and eat thereof for the space of three hundred and ninety days.
Bp. Hall. Hard Texts. Ezekiel, iv. 9.

For what reason is there, which should but induce, and therefore much less inforce us to think that care of dissimilitude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than in charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv. § 6.

It hath not been practised, but it is thought to be of use, to make some missellane in corne; as if you sow a few beans with wheat your wheat will be the better.

MESS, v. } From Mes, metz; It. Messo.
MESS, n. } Skinner suggests—Bar. Lat. Mis- ME'SSMATE. } sus, q. d. cibus missus, meat or food sent, sent round to those who were to eat it;
he seems, however, to suspect that it has some connexion with meat; and Tooke considers it to be the past part. of metsian cibare, to furnish meat or food. By usage, to mess is—

To feed (sc.) together, as soldiers or sailors do.
A mess,—food, a quantity of food: sometimes applied to a large quantity, or hotchpot, more than one can manage; and hence, (met.) the common expression, to get into a mess, to get into difficulty, into a bad plight.

With your brode knyfe properly unclose the napkyn, that the bread is in, and set the bread all beneath the salt towards the seconde messe.

Milton. L'Allegro.

There is not the least thing in the world, which the tempter offers a man for nothing; not so much as a pitiful mess or morsel to relieve thy craving, starving appetites.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 6.

My friend Alcheic formed once a party for my entertainment, composed of all the prime wits and philosophers of Fourli, and each of us brought his mess along with him to

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

There was such demonstration and evidence given to Jesus's being the true Messias by his coming in the flesh, that it cast its discovering influence both backwards and forwards; and equally baffled and confuted the pretences of those who went before, and those who rose up after.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

A crown will not want pretenders to claim it, nor usurpers, if their power serves them to possess it: and hereupon the Messiahship was pretended to by several impostors.—Id. Ib.

The word Messiah signifies anointed; that is a person appointed to some high station, dignity, or office; because originally among the Eastern nations men so appointed (particularly kings, priests, and prophets) were anointed with oil.—Porteus. Truth and Divine Origin of the Christ. Rev.

MESSUAGE. Skinner refers to mease, domus, which he derives from the Fr. Meix, or as Menage writes it, mas, and DuCange—mes, an old word for maison. DuCange says of the Low Lat. Messuagium, that it is formed from mes, i. e. mansus, a manse or mansion; and Vossius,—quasi mansiagium, (De Vit. lib. iii. c. 25.) The word is of common usage in legal instruments of conveyance.

There were then greater number of mesuages and mansions almost in every place.—Harrison. Desc. of Eng. c. 22.

METAPHYSICK, adj. } Fr. Métaphysique; METAPHYSICK, n. } It. Metafisica; Sp. Metaphisica; METAPHYSICAL. } Low
METAPHYSICALLY. } Lat. Metaphysica;
METAPHYSICIAN. } Gr. Μετα τα φυσικα.

The Lat. Metaphisica is rendered super-naturalia, and it is so used by Shakespeare. And see the quotation from Gillies's Aristotle for the imposition of the name upon some of the writings of that philosopher.

And there corrupt they their iudgements with apparent arguments, and wyth alleaging vnto them textes of logike, of naturall philautia, of metaphisike, and morall philosophy, & all maner bookes of Aristotle.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 104.

All they haue none other thing for themselves, as farre as I haue redde and could perceiue, but arguments grouded vpon philosophy & metaphysicall reasons.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 386.

The one part which is phisic, inquireth and handleth the material and efficient causes; and the other, which is metaphysic, handleth the formal and final causes.

Bacon. On the Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

By which sayings, [Jer. xxiii. 24. 2 Chron. vi. 18.] the divine immensity is as fully expressed as by the artificial term ubiquity; that is, every-where, or by any metaphysick book.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 8.

— High thee hither,
 That I may poure my spirits in thine eare,
 And chastise with the valour of my tongue
 All that impeides thee from the golden round
 Which fate and metaphysicall ayde doth seeme
 To haue thee crown'd withall.—Shakes. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 3.

And of this sort, a man may find an infinite number of propositions, reasonings, and conclusions, in books of metaphysicks, school-divinity, and some sort of natural philosophy; and after all, know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before he set out.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 8. s. 9.

Those who discourse metaphysically of the nature of truth, as to the reality of the thing, affirm a perfect coincidence between truth and goodness; and I believe it might be easily made out, that there is nothing in nature perfectly true but what is also really good.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

But the importance rises higher when we reflect upon the application of words to metaphysics. And when I say metaphysic, you will be pleased to remember, that all general reasoning, all politics, law, morality, and divinity, are merely metaphysic.—Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. ii. c. 4.

From this part of Aristotle's logic, there is an easy transition to what has been called his metaphysics; a name unknown to the author himself, and given to his most abstract philosophical works by his editors, from an opinion that those books ought to be studied immediately after his physics, or treatises on natural philosophy.

Gillies. Analysis of Aristotle's Works, vol. i. c. 2.

This experimental philosophy, no one now is in danger of confounding with the metaphysical speculations already mentioned.—Stewart. The Human Mind, pt. i. Intro.

In the writings, indeed, of several other modern metaphysicians, we meet with a variety of important and well ascertained facts; but, in general, these facts are blended with speculations upon subjects which are placed beyond the reach of the human faculties.—Id. Ib.

METASTASIS. Gr. Μεταστασις, μετα, and στασις, station, place.

Change of place; a motion or removal.

He considers what not unfrequently happens in distempered bodies by the metastasis of the morbinick matter.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 197.

For oftentimes nature will, in spite of remedies, make a metastasis of the peccant matter, and so impair the condition of the patient.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 240.

R. Brunne, p. 22.

And in what mesure ye meten, it schal be meten agen to you.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 7.

And w^t what mesure ye mete, w^t the same shall it be measured to you agayne.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And there weren set sixe stoonen cannes aftir the clensing of the Jewis, holdinge, ech twayne either thre metretis.

Wiclif. Jon, c. 2.

And therefore this marke that we must shoote at, set vp wel in our sight, we shal nowe mete for the shoote, and consider how neare toward, or how farre of, your arrowes are frō the prik.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1157.

For some of them I see wel be not worth the meating, and no great maruayl, though I shoote wide whyle I somewhat mystake the marke.—Id. Ib.

The mēetrodde that he hadde in his hande, was syxe cubytes longe and a spanne.—Bible, 1551. Ezek. c. 40.

Nay say they, the scriptures is so harde, that thou couldest neuer understand it but by the doctours. That is, I must measure the mete yarde by the cloth.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 103.

The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
Cast off his followers: and their memorie
Shall as a patterne, or a measure, live,
By which his grace must mete the liues of others,
Turning past-euills to advantages.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 4.

He reformed the olde vntrue measures, and made a measure by the length of his own arme, which was then called vlna, an elle, and now the same is called a yard, or a metwand, &c.—Stow. Hen. I. an. 1102.

Then, of your labour to compute the gain,
Before you fill the vessels, mete the grain.
Cooke. Hesiod. Works & Days, b. ii.

But the aulnager, the weigher, the meeter of grants, will not suffer us to acquiesce in the judgement of the prince reigning at the time when they were made.
Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

METEMPSYCHOSE, v. } Fr. Métempsy- METEMPSYCHOSIS. } chose; Lat. Me- tempsychosis; Gr. Μετεμψυχωσις, μετα, and ψυχη, the soul.

The transmigration or passage of the soul from one body to another.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucan affirms to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones.—Peacham. On Blazoning.

How great a joy 'twould be, how great a bliss,
If we could have a metempsychosis!—Brome. To Mr. J. B.

For thus we read in Plato, that from the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts most suitable unto their humane condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 27.

The sages of old live again in us; and in opinions there is a metempsychosis. We are our re-animated ancestours, and antedate their resurrection.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

Oh! had he dy'd of old, how great a strife
Had been, who from his death should draw their life?
Who should, by one rich draught, become whate'er Seneca, Cato, Numa, Cæsar, were?
Learn'd, virtuous, pious, great; and have by this
An universal metempsychosis.
Dryden. On the Death of Lord Hastings.

But if we understand it of sin already committed in his own person [John ix. 23.] so it favours of the opinion of Pythagoras, then common amongst the Jews, as also at this day, that there is a metempsychosis, or transmigration of our souls from one body to another successively.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

The lute's light genius now does proudly rise
Heav'd on the surges of swoln rhapsodies,
Whose flourish (meteor-like) doth curl the air
With flash of high-born fancies.
Crashaw. Musick's Duel.

I see a resemblance of that meteorical light which appears in morish places, that seems fire, but is nothing but a flimsy glittering exhalation, causing both the wonder and error of the traveller; leading him through the impulsive motion of the air into a ditch.—Bp. Hall. Soliloquy 12.

In sundry animals we deny not a kind of natural meteorology, or innate presentation both of wind and weather.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 10.

With many others, considerable in meteorological divinity, which would more sensibly make out the epithite of the heathens.—Id. Ib. b. vii. c. 4.

The cherubim descended; on the ground

Ris'n from a river o'er the marish glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heel
Homeward returning. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Fate scatters lightening from thy meteor-shield,
And ruin spreads around the sanguine tide.
Beattie. The Judgment of Paris (1765.)

Now any appearance of a body of light in the air is called by the Greek and Latin authors a star, though it be only a meteor, that is, a transient, accidental, luminous vapour, neither of considerable height, nor of long continuance; in which sense also the Scripture speaks of stars falling from heaven.—Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 2.

This, too, is the region of the most awful and alarming meteorological appearances—"vapours, and clouds, and storms."—Stewart. Philosophical Essays, c. 2. Ess. 2.

METHE/GLIN. Welsh Meddyglyn. A kind of drink among the Welsh, made of wine and honie sodden together, (Minshew.) See HYDROMEL.

Howbeit they [cider and perry] are not their onlie drinke at all times, but referred vnto the delicate sorts of drinke, as metheglin is in Wales, whereof the Welchmen make no lesse accompt (and not without cause if it be well handled) than the Greeks did of their ambrosia or nectar.
Harrison. Description of England, b. ii. c. 6.

Ass. Metheglin! what's that, sir? may I be so audacious to demand.—B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act i. sc. 4.

O'er our parch'd tongue the rich metheglin glides.

Methodist,—one who pursues an orderly course or way, or system; a systematizer. Also one of—
A religious sect; so called, probably, from the precise and orderly habits and manners of their founder and his early converts.

Method hath been placed, and not amiss, in logic, as a part of judgment: for as the doctrine of syllogisms comprehendeth the rules of judgment upon that which is invented, so the doctrine of method containeth the rules of judgment upon that which is to be delivered.
Bacon. Of the Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

—For honours, riches, kingdoms, glory,
Have been before contemn'd, and may agen:
Therefore to know what more thou art than man,
Worth naming Son of God by voice from heav'n,
Another method I must now begin.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

For of these manner of rulings by one, by the fewer part, and by the multitude or greater nūber, they which have more methodically and more distinctly & perfitly written vpon them, doe make a subdiuision.
Smith. Commonwealth, c. 3.

As Themison, and his old sect of methodists resolv'd, that the laxum and strictum, the immoderate dissolution or constipation, were the principles and originals of all diseases in the world, so it will be likely to prove in our spiritual estate also.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 577.

Let such persons rather acknowledge the goodness of God towards them, and not quarrel with the great physician of souls for having cured them by easy and gentle methods.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

For he [the devil] is able to present images of words and sentences to the imagination, in as clear and perspicuous an order, as the most faithful and methodical memory.
Id. vol. v. Ser. 3.

You must not expect that I should methodically enumerate and particularly discourse to you of all the grounds and motives I may have of looking for great advantages to accrue to mankind by men's future progresses in the discovery of nature.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 422.

And therefore I wonder not that the most learned of the methodists themselves have much valued and celebrated some peculiar processes and receipts.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 245.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are Nature still, but Nature methodis'd:
Nature, like Liberty, is but restrain'd
By the same laws, which first herself ordain'd.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

Let them not be left (as is too much, God knows, the case) to pick it up themselves as well as they can, from casual information, or a few superficial, unconnected instructions; but let it be taught them systematically and methodically.—Porteus, vol. i. Ser. 9.

And of late this loose, and I can hardly help calling it profane humour, has been directed chiefly against the followers of methodism.—Paley, Ser. 1.

Do methodists deserve this treatment? Be their particular doctrines what they may, the professors of these doctrines appear to be in earnest about them; and a man who is in earnest in religion cannot be a bad man, still less a fit subject for derision.—Id. Ib.

Here, therefore, ye have an evident metonymy: the thing signified, which is the husband's power, is put for that which signifies it, which is the woman's vail.
Bp. Hall, Ser. 1. Cor. xi. 10.

Intricate turnings, by a transumptive and metonymical kind of speech, are called meanders: for this river [Meander] did so strangely path itself, that the foot seemed to touch the head.—Drayton. Rosamond to King Henry, Note 2.

This vow of theirs therefore is metonymically filthy, because it makes them such.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, s. 16.

By [life] I suppose, there can be no need of proving, that our Saviour does not here mean [life] barely and physically so taken, and no more; which is but a poor thing, God knows; but by life, according to a metonymy of the subject for the adjunct, understands the happiness of life in the very same sense wherein S. Paul takes this word in 1 Thess. ii. 8.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

The disposition also of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by that name [colour] metonymically (to borrow a school-term) or efficiently, that is in regard of its turning the light, that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 671.

To tropes, founded on these several relations, of cause and effect, container and contained, sign and thing signified, is given the name of metonymy.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 14.

METOPO/SCOPY. Gr. Μετωποσκοπος, from μετωπον, a forehead, and σκειπειν, to regard; Lat. Metoposcopus; Fr. Métoposcopie; Sp. Metoposcopia.

The art of divination by inspection of the forehead.

Appion the Grammarian hath left in writing (a thing incredible to be spoken) that a certaine Physiognomist, or teller of fortunes by looking only upon the face of men and women, such as the Greekes call metoposcopus, judged truly by the pourtraits that Apelles had drawne, how many years they either had lived or were to live, for whom those pictures were made.—*Holland. Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. § 18.

By consent of all churches grounded on such obvious reason of things, the precedence in each province was assigned to the Bishop of the Metropolis, who was called the first Bishop, the Metropolitan:—other ancient synods style him the Metropolitane; and to the Metropolitans of the principal cities they give the name of Archbishop.—Thus I conceive the Metropolitane governance was introduced by humane prudence following considerations of publick necessity or utility.—*Barrow. MICH, v. } Also written Meech; to miche, MI'CHER. } to lurk, with a slight deviation,
MI'CHERY. } from the Fr. Muser, to idle. A MI'CHING, n. } micher, a covetous man, either from Lat. Miser, or from the Fr. Miche; mica panis, because he counts all the crumbs that fall from his table, (Skinner.) The latter etymology is undoubtedly the true one. Mr. Tyrwhitt tells us that in the Promptuarium parvum, "mychyn" stands as equivalent to "pryvely stelyn smale thyngs." And Lambard, in his Eirenarchia, says, that one justice may charge constables to arrest such as shall be suspected to be "draw-latches, wastors, or robertsmen, that is to say, either miching or mightie theeves:"—contrasting these different sorts of plunderers. The Fr. Miche, Lat. Mica, is a small thing.

To miche, is to take or steal small things, to pilfer; and, consequentially, to lay in wait, to lurk.

A micher,—one who takes or steals, small things;
a pilferer, a petty thief; one who lies in wait, lurks, or loiters about; either to thieve, or for other purposes.

How should I by this word him leve,
Unneth that he nis a micher
Forsworne, or els Goddes lier.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

But nowe thou shalt full sore abie
That like stelthe of micherie,
That thou hast both take and do.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For no man of his counsaile knoweth,
What he maie gette of his michynge.—Id. Ib.

But should straggle up and downe the country, or mich
in corners amongst their friends idly.
Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

Though michers that love not to buy or to crave,
Make some gather [fruit] sooner, or else few to have.
Tusser. September's Husbandry.

Shall the blessed Sonne of Heauen proue a micher, and eate black-berrys? a question not to be askt.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 4.

Sure she has some meeching rascal in her house, some hind, that she hath seen bear (like another Milo) quarters of malt upon his back and sing with't.

MI'CROCOSM. } Fr. Microcosme; It. and MICROCO'SMICAL. } Sp. Microcosmo; Lat. Micro- cosmus; Gr. Μικροκοσμος, μικρος, small, little, and κοσμος, the world. The examples explain the usage; see especially that from Raleigh.

She, to whom this world must itself refer,
As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;
She, she is dead.
Donne. Anatomy of the World. The First Anniversary.

There were some also, that staid not here; but went further, and held; that if the spirit of man (whom they call the microcosm) do give a fit touch to the spirit of the world, by strong imaginations, and beleefes, it might command nature.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 900.

Because in the little frame of man's body there is a representation of the universal, and (by allusion) a kind of participation of all the parts there, therefore was man called microcosmos, or the little world.

Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. i. c. 2.

This opinion confirmed would much advance the micro- cosmical conceit, and commend the geography of Paracelsus; who according to the cardinal points of the world divideth
the body of man.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 3.

Why, as great, no doubt, and of as fatal consequence to the affairs and government of the microcosm, or lesser world, as if, in the greater, God should put out the sun, and establish one great, universal cloud in the room of it.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

MICROGRAPHY. Gr. Μικρος, small, and γραφειν, to write, to describe.

The description of small things, (sc. visible by aid of the microscope.)

(For want of Dr. Hook's Micrography being at hand, it being a very scarce book) [I have] given descriptions of two or three things, which I have thought had not been tolerably well observed before, but are described well by that curious gentleman.—Derham. Physico-Theology, Pref.

MICROSCOPE. From the Gr. Μικρος, small or little, and σκοπη, σκοπεω, to see, to view, to see small things; (sc.) magnified or enlarged.

An instrument to see or examine small things (magnified or enlarged.)

Many a fair edifice besides, more like Houses of Gods (so well I have dispos'd My aery microscope) thou may'st behold Outside and inside both.—Milton. Par. Regained, b. iv.

To the performance of every muscular motion, in greater animals at least, there are not fewer distinct parts concerned than many millions of millions and these visible through a microscope.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

The works of art do not bear a nice microscopical inspection, but the more helps are used, and the more nicely you pry into natural productions, the more do you discover of the fine mechanism of Nature.—Berkeley. Siris, § 283.

There are, besides the above mentioned, innumerable retainers to physick, who, for want of other patients, amuse themselves with the stifling of cats in an air-pump; cutting up dogs alive, or impaling of insects upon the point of a needle for microscopic observations.—Spectator, No. 21.

The magic of those works, in which by the help of glasses we discover all the beauties of statuary and drawing, and even the science of anatomy, has been restricted to an age that was ignorant of microscopic glasses; a problem hitherto unresolved to satisfaction.

MIDWIFE, n. In A. S. Thenian wifum, is MID-WIFE, v. mulieribus administrare, obstetricare. Doct. Th. H. says, q. d. A. S. Med-wif; "wife or woman hired, for meed or reward." Junius,—that it is a word compounded of meed, reward, and wife. And Versteegan, (c. 7,) "mede-wyf, a woman of mede, or merit, deserving recompense."

To mid-wive, is to act as midwife; and consequentially, to help into the world; to help to bring forth or produce; to produce.

MIEN, n. Fr. Mine; Ger. Mine, from meinen, significare, to signify, to mean, (Wachter.) Skinner considers it to be a word newly introduced, and derives it from the Low Lat. Minare, ducere, q. d. ductus seu lineamentum faciei, the draught or delineation of the face. Wachter may be right; but it is evidently used by Spenser as equivalent to demean or demeanour. (See DEMEAN.) Such interchanges of a simple and compound term are familiar to our old poets. Mien is applied to—

The whole manner and appearance of behaviour or comportment; to—the look, the countenance, with correspondent carriage of body.

Her whyles Sir Calidore there vewed well, And mark't her rare demeanure which him seemed So farre the meane of shepherds to excell, As that he in his mind her worthy deemed To be a prince's paragone esteemed, He was unwares surpris'd in subtle bands Of the blynd boy.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

The whiles that mighty man did her demean With all the evil termes and cruell meane That he could make.—Id. Ib. c. 7.

A mien compos'd of mildness and of state, Not by constraint or affectation great. Stepney. To the Memory of Q. Mary.

If my phantasy betrayed not my judgment, I observed in his eyes a mien, a vivacity, and sprightliness that is nothing common.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 75.

Not in thy gorgon terrours clad, Nor circled with the vengeful band, (As by the impious thou art seen,) With thundering voice and threatening mien. Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

MIFF. Perhaps from Dut. Maffelen, mussitare, to mutter. See MAFFLE.

A muttering discontent or displeasure.

Nay she [Mrs. Blifil] would through it in the teeth of Allworthy himself, when a little quarrel or miff, as it is vulgarly called, arose between them.

 To depart, leave, quit or remove from.

Wo is me, too too long banished from the Christian world, with such animosity, as if it were the worst of enemies, and meet to be adjudged to a perpetual migration.
Bp. Hall. The Invisible World. The Epistle.

The migration of birds from an hotter to a colder country, or a colder to an hotter, according to the seasons of the year, as their nature is, I know not how to give an account of, it is so strange and admirable.—Ray. Creation, pt. i.

The Tuscans were a branch of the Pelasgi that migrated into Europe not many ages after the dispersion.
Langhorne. Milton's Epitaphium Damonis Translated, N. 2.

They would of course migrate in separate families and clans, which, forgetting by degrees the language of their common progenitor, would form new dialects to convey new ideas.—Sir W. Jones. On the Origin and Families of Nations.

On the other hand, let us suppose a colony upon its migration to have settled itself in a warmer climate, where men would find little or no occasion for clothes, houses, or the preparation of food by fire, and where they were cut off from all communication with the rest of the world.
Horne. Works, vol. iv. Dis. 24.

This purpose is sometimes carried on by a sort of migratory instinct, sometimes by the spirit of conquest; at one time avarice drives men from their homes, at another they are actuated by a thirst of knowledge; where none of these causes can operate, the sanctity of particular places attracts men from the most distant quarters.

MI'LITATE, v. } Varro, lib. iv.
MILI'TIA. } A military man, or militarist, whose business is war; a soldier.

Militant,—warring, fighting, contending. To militate, (now a common word,)—to war or fight against; to oppose, to disagree, or be discordant with.

I thinke hee can not prooue but that S. Paules saying is verified of the Church, that is here militant, and not of the Church triumphant.—Barnes. Workes, p. 253.

And where on earth long militant before,
 She now triumphs in Heaven for evermore.
Stirling. Domes-day. The Twelfth Houre.

How doe they look up at us, as even now militantly-triumphant, whiles they are miserably wallowing in dust and blood.—Bp. Hall. Ser. at Westminster, April 5, 1628.

All humane life, especially the active part, is constituted in a state of continual militancy.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 10. s. 7.

Although he were a prince in militar vertue approued, jealous of the honour of the English nation, and likewise a good law-maker, for the ease and solace of the common people.—Bacon. Hen. VII.

Suetonius Paullinus was esteemed the most expert man of that age for militare affayres.—Savile. Tacit. Hist. p. 71.

Those of templars, St. James, Calatrava, Alcantara, and such like other, were more religious than military.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 15. Selden. Illustrations.

Cap. G. Y'are deceu'd my lord, this is Mounsieur Parroles the gallant militarist, that was his owne phrase.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. sc. 3.

Therefore let any Prince or State thinke soberly of his forces; except his militia of natives be of good and valiant souldiers.—Bacon. Of Kingdomes & Estates.

His hope, no mitre militant on earth,
 'Tis that bright crown, which Heav'n reserves for worth.
Savage. The Character of the Rev. James Forster.

Know then, unnumber'd spirits round thee fly,
 The light militia of the lower sky.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 1.

This consideration would militate with more effect against his hypothesis, than a thousand syllogisms.
Blackburne. Confessional.

The common military sword is a heavy massive weapon, for close engagement; wielded by a strong and skilful arm, it stabs and cuts, opens dreadful gashes where it falls, severs limbs, lops the head, or cleaves the body.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 7.

MILK, v. } Also written Milch. Dut. Melch; Ger. Milch; A. S. Meolc, from the verb melcian, meolc-ian, mulgere; Gr. Μελεγειν, or αμελεγειν, which signifies,—ubera valde tractando et molliendo lac educere vel exprimere,—to draw or press out by handling or softening with the hand.

Milk is applied (met.) to softness, gentleness, effeminacy;—hence a milk-sop, soft as a sop, or any thing sopped in milk.

To milk,—to draw out or extract, to drop, or distil, the milk, the juices or moisture; to drain.

Hony & mylk ther ys muche. R. Gloucester, p. 43.

Hour Louerd myd ys eyen of milce on the loketh theruore. Id. p. 265.

To husselle seilde cam. and suffrede to be milked.
Piers Plouhman, p. 285.

As to litle children in Crist I ghaf to ghou mylk drynk not mete.—Wiclif, 1 Cor. c. 3.

For lich a mother she can cherish
And milken as doth a norice.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

“Alas,” she saith, “that ever I was yshape
To wed a milksope, or a coward ape.”
Id. The Monkes Prologue, v. 13,916.

And to ayd the kyng in hys right must the commons be milked till they bleede agayne.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 365.

I gaue them a lād that floweth with mylck and hony.
Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 20.

For thou hast caught a proper paragon,
A theefe, a coward, and a peacocke foole,
An asse, a milksope, and a minion.
Gascoigne. Farewel with a Mischiefe.

When from the boughes a savourie odour, blown;
Grateful to appetite, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even,
Unsuokt of lamb or kid, that tend their play.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

It is by all confess'd, thy happy straines,
Distill'd from milky streames of native veines,
Did like the liuing source of Naso's song,
Flow to the eare, thence gently glide along Downe to the heart.
Beaumont. To the Memory of Sir J. Beaumont.

When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that she made
Would haue made milche the burning eyes of heauen,
And passion in the Gods.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

— Then at my farme
I haue a hundred milch-kine to the pale.
Id. Taming the Shrew, Act ii. sc. 1.

And they call him also the milken-way, and the Elijah of the Messiah.—Bacon. New Atlantis.

Gon. Milke-liuer'd-man,
That bear'st a cheek for blowes, a head for wrongs,
Who hast not in thy browes an eye-discerning Thine honour, from thy suffering.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 2.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,
And the milkmaid singeth blith. Milton. L'Allegro.

Nor. Tis but a sweat of honor—(alas) thou milksope,
Thou man of march-pain, canst thou fear to see
A few light hurts, that blush they are no bigger.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Knight of Malta, Act ii. sc. 1.

Thou wilt not find my shepherdesses idly piping on oaten reeds, but milking the kine, tying up the sheaves.
Gay. The Shepherd's Week, Proeme to the Reader.

His kine, with swelling udders, ready stand,
And lowing for the pail, invite the milker's hand.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

Cleom. Would I could share the balmy, even temper,
And milkeness of blood. Id. Cleomenes, Act i. sc. 1.

The milky-way being found to be (as was formerly conjectur'd) nothing but great companies or swarms of minute stars singly invisible, but by reason of their proximity mingling and confounding their lights, and appearing like lucid clouds.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Milk is the first support of our childhood. The component parts of this are water, oil, and a sort of very sweet salt, called the sugar of milk.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iv. s. 22.

Perhaps in some far distant shore,
There are who in these forms delight;
Whose milky features please them more,
Than ours of jet thus burnish'd bright.—Crabbe. Woman.

MILL, n. } A. S. Myln; Dut. Meulen; Ger. Mühle; Fr. Moulin; It. Molino; Sp. Molino; Lat. Mola, from molere, to grind; Goth. Mal-an; Ger. Mal-en, mülen; Sw. Maala.

A mill,—that which grindeth; an engine to grind, (sc.) grain, pulse, &c. Also used in coining; hence, to mill money, is—

To coin, or stamp coin, by means of a mill.

In bargeis & galeis he set mylnes to go. R. Brunne, p. 173.

And whoever schal sclandre oon of these litil that bileven in me it were betere to him that a milne stoon were doen about his necke and he were caste into the sea. Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

And whosoeuer shall offende one of these lytel-ones, that beleue in me, it were better for hym that a mylstone wer hanged about hys necke & that he were cast into the sea. Bible, 1551. Ib.

Jangling, is whan men speketh to moche before folk, and clappeth as a mille, and taketh no kepe what he sayeth. Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

— And with hir napron feir and white ywash
She wygid soft hir eyen for teris that she out lash
As grete as any mylstone.
The Pardoner & Tapestry. Imputed to Chaucer.

But al is one to you a horse mill & a mill-horse, drinke ere ye goe, & goe ere you drinke. Sir T. More. Workes, p. 238.

What man, more water glideth by the mill
Then wots the *mill*er of, and easie it is
Of a cut loafe to steale a shiue we know.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act ii. sc. 1.

— The which, once being burst,
Like to a great mill-dam forth fiercely gusht
And poured out of her infernall sinke
Most ugly filth. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

His legs, which creep out of two old-fashion'd knapsacks,
Are neither two mill-posts, nor yet are they trap-sticks.
Cotton. Epistle to Sir Clifford Clifton.

The *mill*er was throwne one way, another man another way, one towards the North the other South, a parte of the mill rooffe, and halfe the millstone, on the like manner, throwne one way, the other halfe another way. Stow. Q. Eliz. an. 1600.

He goes to market with twenty shillings in one pocket of this new money, which are valued at 240 pence; and in the other pocket with four mill'd crown pieces, (or twenty mill'd shillings of the present coin,) which are valued at three hundred pence, which is one-fifth more. Locke. Of the Lowering of Interest, &c.

As I remember, suitable to this policy of the Mint, there was, some two years since, a complaint of a worthy gentleman, not ignorant of it, that the mill in the Mint stood still; and therefore there was a proposal offer'd for bringing grist to the mill.—Id. Ib.

For lo! the board with cups and spoons is crown'd,
The berries crackle, and the mill turns round.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock.

In a plain pleasant cottage, conveniently neat,
With a mill and some meadows—a freehold estate,
A well meaning *mill*er by labour supplies
Those blessings, that grandeur to great ones denies.
Cunningham. The Miller.

Blondeau, after the Restoration, November 3, 1662, received letters of denization, and a grant for being engineer of the Mint in the Tower of London, and for using his new invention for coining gold and silver with the mill and press. Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

Not so where, scornful of a check, it leaps
The milldam, dashes on the restless wheel,
And wantons in the pebbly gulph below.
Couper. The Task, b. v.

MILLENIANISM.

Syluestre, after the full accomplishment of this myllenary of years rysynge out of the depe pyt, &c. Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii. p. 9.

We are apt to dream that God will make his saints reign here as kings in a millenary kingdom. Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

What riddles are in that prophecy, which no human tongue can read! Where to fix the beginning of that marvellous millenary, and where the end. Bp. Hall. Breathings of the Devout Soul, § 15.

Daniel, in the construction of the favours of the millenarian opinion, is pretended to speak particularly of the tyrannical reign of anti-christ, of his destruction, of the happy deliverance and peace of the faithful under the Gospel.—Id. The Revelation unrevealed.

To what purpose should we ransack the grave, and rake in the ashes of an odious Cerinthus, or an unexploded Papias, for the long-since condemned conceits of an old, and hitherto forgotten millenarism.—Bp. Hall. Revelation unrevealed.

'Tis said that he [Sir W. Raleigh] wrote a tract of millenarianism, he having for some time been much addicted to that opinion.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

When at your second coming you appear,
(For I foretell the millenary year,)
The sharpen'd share shall vex the soil no more,
But earth unbidden shall produce her store.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, Ded.

MILLET. Fr. Millet; It. Miglio; Sp. Mijo; Lat. Milium; perhaps so called from the multitude of its seeds. See Vossius and Martinius.

As touching the millet, the head thereof bearing seed round about, is bent likewise and curbed, beset also with fringes (as it were) of hairie fillets. Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 7.

Some of his [Hook] friends (whose testimonials he desired) did affirm, that they had seen 10,000, others 30,000, others 45,000, little living creatures, in a quantity of water no bigger than a grain of millet.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

— And there, if thou
Wouldst make the sand yield salutary food,
Let Indian millet rear its corny reed,
Like arm'd battalions in array of war.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iv.

MILLINER, so called from Milaner, one from Milan; or Malineer, from Maline; or millenarius, because he deals in a thousand articles. It is perhaps mistlener, from mistlen or mestlin, a medley or mixture.

One who deals in a mixed variety of articles.

Lor. He hath songs for man or woman, of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloues. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

Tho' sometimes I injure the milliner's sight,
Still I add to her credit and store.—Cotton. To a Lady.

Than she par cas that richest is,
And hath of golde a milion. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And but with fifteen hundred men do land,
Upon a land with many millions stor'd;
So much did high-presuming courage stand
On th' aid home-disobedience would afford.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

But reckoning time, whose million'd accidents
Creep in 'twixt vows and change decrees of kings,
Tan sacred beauty, blunt the sharpest intents,
Divert strong minds to the course of altering things.
Shakespeare, son. 115.

The million'd merchant seeks her [Honour] in his gold;
In schools the pedant, and in camps the bold.
P. Whitehead. Honour. A Satire, (1747.)

MILT. } Also written melt. The A. S. Milt; MILTER. } Dut. Mildt; Ger. Miltz; Sw. Melt;
It. and Sp. Milza, is—the spleen. Kilian and Wachter agree to derive from mild, mollis; the former, because the spleen is soft; the latter, because it is the seat of mildness or gentleness.

Milt, as applied to the soft roe of a fish, is probably the same word.

And it [that carps breed several months in one year] is the rather to be believed, because you shall scarce, or never, take a male carp without a melt, or a female without a roe or spawn.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 9.

That they might do so [by breeding] he had, as the rule is, put in three melters for one spawner.—Id. Ib.

MIMO-GRAPHER. }

— In the fit
Of miming, gets th' opinion of a wit.—B. Jonson, Epig. 115

Nor yet doth he tell us what a mime is, wherof we have no pattern from ancient writers, except some fragments, which contain many acute and wise sentences. And this we know in Laertius, that the mimes of Sophron were of such reckoning with Plato, as to take them nightly to read on, and after make them his pillow. Scaliger describes a mime to be a poem, imitating any action to stir up laughter.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

And wheras he tells us that scurrilous mime was a personated grim lowring fool, his foolish language unwittingly writes Fool upon his own friend.—Id. Ib.

Oft in her absence mimic Fancie wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapes,
Wilde work produces oft.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Anon this Thisbee must be answered,
And forth my mimick comes.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 2.

Thus to celebrate the blessed sacrament of the Lord's supper is mimical and theatrical, trifling and superstitious, a snare to consciences, and a contempt of religion.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

True it is, indeed, which a great master [Aristotle] hath long before taught us, that man is of all creatures the most mimical, as a kind of near adjunct to reason.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 83.

Next her the buffoon ape, as atheists use,
Mimick'd all sects, and had his own to choose.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

In these she views the mimickry of man,
And smiles when grinning pug gallants her fan.

Gay. The Toilette.

Such are good for nothing, but either mimically to imitate their neighbours' fooleries, or to immerse themselves in a kind of lascivious and debauched living.—South, vol. v. Ser. 9.

When full grown, it [vanity] is the worst of vices, and the occasional mimick of them all. It makes the whole man false.—Burke. To a Member of the National Assembly.

"Such whimsical wonders," (he [Wheatley] very justly adds,) "lose their effect, when represented in a picture, or mimicked in ground artificially laid."

Stewart. Philos. Essays, pt. ii. Ess. 1.

Such parts of it [Europe] as are divided into small territories are commonly governed by absolute princes, who ruin their people by a mimicry of the great monarchs, in the splendour of their court, and number of their forces.

Hume, pt. ii. Ess. 11.

If I were composing a dialogue in the old mimetical, or poetic form, I should tell you, perhaps, the occasion that led us into this track of conversation.

Hurd, Dial. 7. On Foreign Travel.

For the best idea that can now be formed of the manner of this famous mimographer, we must have recourse, I believe, to the fifteenth idyl of Theocritus.

To separate, to cut into small or minute pieces or parts; to shorten, or clip, or cut (the words in speech); to shorten, (sc.) the steps in walking; to speak or walk with nicety, caution, with slow or small gradations, or progress.

An y^a shalte mince it small, and poure oyle thereon.

Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 2.

And therefore shall the common people take no harme, though themselves concerning treason or heresye, fall not by suche bookes to the myncynge of suche matters, and dyspute howe farre they maye goe forward in them, without the extreme daunger and peryll of them.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 964.

Now shepherds lay their winter weeds away,
And in neat jackets minsen on the plains;
And at the rivers fishing day by day,
Now who so frolic as the shepherd swains?

Drayton, Ecl. 7.

And O! how this (deare prince) the people charmes,
Who flock about thee oft in ravish'd bands,
To see thee yong yet manage so thine armes,
Have a mercuriall mince, and martiall hands.

Daniel. A Paraenesis to Prince Henry.

With her dear daughter Dale, which her firm cheek doth lay

To her dear mother's breast, as mincingly she traces,
And oft embracing her, she oft again embraces,
And on her darling smiles, with every little gale.

Spenser. Virgil. Gnat.

The word minister, in the original Διακονος, signifieth one that voluntarily doth the business of another man; and differeth from a servant only in this, that servants are obliged by their condition to what is commanded them:
whereas ministers are obliged only by their undertaking,
and bound therefore to no more than they have undertaken.

Hobbs. Leviathan, pt. iii. c. 42.

But this is a sure rule, that if the enuy upon the minister be great, when the cause of it in him is smal, or if the enuy be generall in a manner, upon all the ministers of an estate;
then the enuy (though hidden) is truly upon the state itselfe.—Bacon. Ess. Of Enuie.

Those churches that are zealous for souls must send into

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 2.

The generation of bodies is not effected, as some conceive of souls, that is, by irradiation, or answerable unto the propagation of light, without its proper diminution; but therein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one: and the propagation of one, is in a strict acception, some minoration of another.

perplexed the etymology. It appears, however, to have been no more than a consequential usage of the Fr. Ministre; Lat. Ministri, (in the diminutive form of Menestral, ministrilli), and applied to a class of persons, who were to administer their skill in poetry and music for the amusement of their patrons. They are in Low Lat. sometimes called plainly ministri; by Chaucer, in his Dream, ministers; and in the old paper roll printed by Leland, we find "ministers," who were appointed "to syng." See Du Cange, Gloss.

Menestral he was gode ynow, & harpore in eche poynte.

To Athelstan paulyon myd ys harpe he wende,

And so wel wythoute harpede, that me after hym sende.

R. Gloucester, p. 272.

And somme murthes to make as mynstrals conneth.

Piers Plouhman, p. 3.

Jhesus cam into the hous of the prince and saigh the mynstrels and the puple makynge noyse.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 9

Jesus came into the reuelers house, and saw the minstreis

Thus wil I bringe the melody of thy songes, and the voice of thy mynstreley to an ende, so that they shall no more be herde.—Bible, 1551. Ezechiel, c. 26.

Harke! how the minstrils gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or iar.
Spenser. Epithalamion.

Per. By Pan, and by the strife
He had with Phœbus for the mastery,
When golden Midas judg'd their minstreley,
I will not.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv. sc. 1.

Mean time the minstrels play'd on either side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd;
The sweet contention lasted for an hour,
And reach'd my secret arbour from the bower.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

The rolls of fame, I will not now explore;
Nor need I here describe, in learned lay,
How forth the minstrel far'd in days of yore,
Right glad of heart, though homely in array,
His waving locks and beard all hoary gray.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

The day was long, the wind was cold,
The Minstrel was infirm and old,
His withered cheek and tresses gray
Seemed to have known a better day.
Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel.

MINT. Fr. Mente; It. Minta; Lat. Mentha; Gr. Μινθη.

Woo to you Scribes and Pharisees ypocrits that tithen

Tho went I forth on my right hond, Downe by a litel path I fond
Of mintes full, and fennel greene.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

As for mint, men use it at the same time, of a young plant, so soone as they see it spurt and come up: but if it have not sprung, yet they let not to plant the spurnes of the root, knotted into an head within the ground.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 8.

MINT, v. } A. S. Mynetian, cudere, to coin
MINT, n. } or mint money, (Somner.) Ger.
MI'NTAGE. } Muntz-en; Dut. Munt-en. The MI'NTER. } meaning of the word is found in the A. S. Myneq-ian, (mun, ig, ian, see MEAN,) to mark; whence Tooke forms it; mineyed, minyed, min'd, mint. (See MONEY, MIND.) Mint, in A. S.
Mynet, was applied to the coin marked or stamped;
and upon this (mynet) the verb mynetian may have been formed. Mint, noun, is—

The place where the marking or stamping is performed, where the coin is made: (met.) where any thing is coined, forged, or invented.

And also they of the towne to haue a mynt to forge money, bothe whyte and blacke, of the same form and alay as is in Parys.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 304.

And so (vpon the matter) to set the mint on work, and to giue way to new coines of siluer, which should bee then minted.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 215.

— When they do long
To strike out heroes from a mortal wombe,
And mint fair conquerours for the age to come.
Cartwright. To the Countess of Carlisle.

Note that eleauen ounces two-pence ferling, ought to be of so pure siluer, as is called leafe siluer, and the mint must adde of other weight seventeen-pence halfpenny farthing, if the siluer be so pure.—Camden. Remaines. Money, p. 204.

— Let me pour forth
My tears before thy face, whilst I stay here,
For thy face coins them, and thy stamp they bear;
And by this mintage they are something worth.
Donne. A Valediction of Weeping.

The next day he saw the Ordinance house, the Mint houses, and at last the lions.—Stow. King James, an. 1603.

Let such, as are to informe counsels out of their professions (as lawyers, sea-men, mint-men, and the like,) be first heard before committees.—Bacon. Ess. Of Counsell.

Answ. Setting aside the odd coinage of your phrase, which no mint-master of language would allow for sterling.
Milton. Animad. on the Remonstrants' Defence.

Had all the money in King Charles II. and King James II.'s time been minted according to this new proposal, this rais'd money would have been gone as well as the other, and the remainder been no more, nor no less, than it is now. Though I doubt not but the mint would have coin'd as much of it as it has of our present mill'd money.
Locke. Of the Lowering of Interest.

The operations of the Mint were, upon this account, somewhat like the web of Penelope; the work that was done in the day was undone in the night.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 6.

MINUET. Fr. Menuet, (minute.) A dance.

The tender creature could not see his fate
With whom she'd danced a minuet so late.
Stepney. On the University of Cambridge.

Now when the minuet, oft repeated o'er,
Like all terrestrial joys, can please no more,
And every nymph refusing to expand
Her charms, declines the circulating hand.
Jenyns. Dancing, c. 2.

Milton. Il Penseroso.

In vain we prize that at so dear a rate,
Whose long'st assurance bears a minute's date.
Drayton. Duke of Suffolk to Q. Margaret.

And till then, there is a very fit place and season of the exercise of the other part of the passion here, that of indignation, the last minute of my last particular.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 580.

Surely the monks of Saint Alban's were concerned to be carefull how they spent their hours, seeing no convent in England had the like curiosity; this their clock gathering up the least crum of time, prseenting the minutary fractions thereof.—Fuller. Worthies. England. Berkshire.

It is an evidence of the great force that the gospel of Christ had then upon men's souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had, into an absolute contempt of all that is most doted on in the world, κτηματα και υπαρξεις; possessions of all kinds, and by parting with all indefinitely, throwing themselves absolutely upon God's minutely providence for the sustaining of them.
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 472.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? as if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life.
Id. Ib. p. 471.

Euph. O Alciphron! these minute philosophers (since that is their true name) are a sort of pirates, who plunder all that come in their way. I consider myself as a man left stript and desolate on a bleak beach.

At the great day it will be enquired very minutely, not only what we did know, but also what we might have known had we so pleased; had we been in earnest and taken due pains.—Horne. Works, vol. v. Disc. 11.

Vandyck had a peculiar genius for portraits; his draperies are finished with a minuteness of truth not to be demanded in historic compositions.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

The particulars of his life [Inigo Jones] have been often written, and therefore I shall run them over very briefly, adding some less known minutiae and some catalogue of his hibitions or entertainments contrived to excite surprise, &c. were called miracles. In popular language,—

Any thing astonishing, marvellous, wonderful, either natural or preternatural.

In theology,—to such acts as those of Christ in attestation of his mission; contrary to the ordinary course of nature.

For he herde of telle of miracles, that come Thorow Christenemen a] aboute, as wel as Rome.
R. Gloucester, p. 73.

And he shewith the firste myracle which God dide at the weddynge.—Wiclif. Jon, Prol.

And whan that he this tale herde,
How wonderly this chaunce ferde
He thanked God of his myracle,
To whose might maie he none obstacle.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Ime not their father, yet who this should bee
Doth myracle it selfe, lou'd before me.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

A miracle, then, is the extraordinary effect of some unknown power in nature, limited by divine ordination and authority to its circumstances, for a suitable end.
Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 5. s. 13.

Again, there is nothing in the world, but what is indeed doubly miraculous, viz. in its own nature, and in the cast or project of its relation to the universe; neither of which can we ever search out into perfection.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 5.

Hect. Not Neoptolymus so mirable.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

The use of this work, honoured with a precedent in Aristotle, is nothing less than to give contentment to the appetite of curious and vain will, as the manner of mir- abularies is to do.—Bacon. On Learning, b. ii.

A miracle I take to be a sensible operation, which, being above the comprehension of the spectator, and in his opinion contrary to the established course of nature, is taken by men to be divine.—It (is) agreed that as a miracle must be that which surpasses the force of nature in the established, steady laws of causes and effects, nothing can be taken to be a miracle but what is judged to exceed those laws.
Locke. A Discourse of Miracles.

These miracle-mongers have alarm'd the world round about them to a discernment of their tricks.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

He is miracle-proof, and beyond the reach of persuasion;

converted.—Id. vol. ix. Ser. 8.

Galen doth affirm cupping-glasses to work as miraculously as if their operation had depended on enchantment.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 181.

Although some cheats have pretended to cure diseases miraculously, and some have even attempted to raise the dead, yet no impostor, I believe, has ever yet been so bold as to undertake to feed five thousand people at once with five loaves and two fishes, or walk upon the sea.
Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 14.

The miraculousness of such appearances will be no longer used as an argument against their possibility.
West. On the Resurrection, s. 13.

MIRE, v. } Skinner derives from the Dut.
MIRE. } Moyer, modder, lutum, limus, mud.
MIRY. } It is probably from the same source as Meere, moor, maris or marsh, (qqv.)
It is commonly applied to—

That thick, adhesive dirt, in which we are apt, not only to bedaub ourselves, but to stick fast.

His knyghtes vp him lyft & did him eft atire,
William was ogyft, his helm was fulle of myre.
R. Brunne, p. 70.

MIRROR. Fr. Miroir. From Fr. Mirer; It.
Mirare; Sp. Mirar, to look, to view, to behold;
Lat. Mirari. It is applied to—

A bright, lucid substance, in which may be seen the reflected images of objects; a looking-glass; (met.)—that in which men may see their own reflected image; and, consequently, order and regulate their actions and behaviour; hence, the reflected image;—example, pattern.

And in this mirour thou myst see. murthes ful menyne.

But if it be when they hem misavise.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5812.

For then & neuer else is it y^e true fruit of preaching the gospel, if the teacher doe not presumptuously usurp to himself the gift of learning which he hath as a thyng committed to his credit, ne vndiscretely or misadvisedly shewe forth the same, as though it wer of his own: but yeld it vnto Christ to be made holy of him.—Udal. Luke, c. 9.

MIS-AFFE/CT, v. } To have ill or wrong
MISAFFECTIONS. } affections, or dispositions; to dislike, to discontent.

Ans. We shall beseech the same God to give you a more profitable and pertinent humiliation than yet you know, and a less mistaken charitableness, with that peace which you have hitherto so perversely misaffected.
Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Defence.

Or if he be in a throng, middle of a church, multitude, where he may not well get out, though he sit at ease, he is so misaffected.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 181.

nem in crimine, it ushers the flesh of sinfull courses.
Bp. Hall. The Character of Man.

MIS-AFFIRM, v. i. e. to affirm, assert, or declare, wrongly, erroneously.

I suppose it no injury to the dead, but a good deed rather to the living, if by better information given them, or which is enough, by only remembering them the truth of what they themselves know to be here misaffirm'd, they may be kept from entering the third time unadvisedly into war and bloodshed.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, Pref.

MIS-ALLE/GE, v. } i. e. to allege, to assert, MISALLEGATION. } to affirm, to declare,
wrongly, erroneously.

As for those two misalleged authors to whom he ascribes us, his skill doth palpably falle him in both.

MIS-ALL'ED. } i. e. allied, wrongly, erro-MISALL'ANCE. } neously, improperly.

They are a misallied and disparaged branch of the house of Nimrod.—Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

Their purpose was to ally two things, in nature incompatible, the Gothic, and the classic unity; the effect of which misalliance was to discover and expose the nakedness of the Gothic.—Hurd. On Chivalry & Romance, Let. 8.

MIS-ALTERED, i. e. altered, changed, wrongly, injuriously.

These are all (besides those which I fore specified) which have so mis-altered the leiturgy, that it can no more be known to be itself.—Bp. Hall. Ans. to the Vind. of Smectymn. s. 2.

That art thyselfe a man?
Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

Upon this great foundation of misanthropy, (though not in Timon's manner) the whole building of my travels is erected.
Dr. Swift to Pope, Sept. 20, 1725.

Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthrope.—On the Death of Dr. Swift.

His [Draco] abhorrence of the abuses of his predecessors in office, and his indignation against the depravity of his fellow-citizens, embittered his mind, and made him rather a misanthrope than a statesman.—Observer, No. 117.

But let not knaves misanthropy create,
Nor feed the gall of universal hate.
Langhorn. The Enlargement of the Mind, Ep. 1.

What can be more gloomy and misanthropic than the following strain of discontent, extracted by Eustathius!—
Observer, No. 150.

Having given some passages from this poet, where he speaks in the character of a misanthropist, it is but justice to exhibit him as a moralist.—Id. Ib.

MIS-APPLY', v. } To apply, or to put,
MISAPPLICA'TION. } place, or lay to, to direct MISAPPLY'ING, n. } or address, wrongly, erroneously.

Vertue itself turnes vice being misapplied,
 And vice sometime by action dignified.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 3.

He brings me informations, pick'd out of broken words in men's common talk, which, with his malicious misapplication, he hopes will seem dangerous.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Woman Hater, Act i. sc. 3.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
 His kingdom o'er his kindred world began:
 Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,
 And pride of empire sour'd his balmy blood.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The meaning of which providence, should we misconstrue, we should frustrate our grand and last remedy, and perish, not for want, but for misapplication of the means of life.

South, vol. xi. Ser. 3.

All deception is a misapplying of those signs, which by compact, or institution, were made the means of men's signifying, or conveying their thoughts.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 12.

MIS-APPREHE'ND, v. } To apprehend, or MISAPPREHE'NSION. } to take or seize, to take the meaning, to understand, to conceive, wrongly, erroneously; to mistake, to misunderstand, to misconceive.

When the conclusion is deduc'd from unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational; but when from misapprehended or ill-compounded phantasms, we ascribe it to the imagination.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 11.

And what we have to say under this head [the causes of our ignorance] will be comprehensive both of the causes of that, and (which are the effects thereof) of our misapprehensions and errors.—Id. Ib. c. 7.

Patient sinners may want peace through mistakes and misapprehensions of God; for when there is a deep sense of sin, it is no easy matter to keep up the sense of God's readiness to forgive.—Stillington, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

But if the being liable to misapprehension and to misrepresentation be thought an objection to any doctrine, I know of no doctrine which is not liable to the same; or any which has not, in fact, been loaded, at various times, with great mistakes.—Paley, Ser. 23.

MIS-ARRANGEMENT, i. e. a wrong arrangement; a wrong position or disposition; a wrong order.

Here glitt'ring turrets rise, upbearing high (Fantastic misarrangement!) on the roof
 Large growth of what may seem the sparkling trees
 And shrubs of fairy land.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

MIS-ASSAY, v. i. e. to assay, or to try, to attempt, wrongly, improperly.

Willie, why list thou (man) so wo-be-gon?
 What! been thy rather lamkins ill apaid?
 Or hath some drierie chance thy pipe misdone?
 Or hast thou any sheep-cure mis-assayed?

Browne. Willie & Old Wennock, Ecl.

MIS-ATTE'NDED, i. e. attended to, observed, or regarded, not properly, insufficiently.

They shall recover the misattended words of Christ to the sincerity of their true sense from manifold contradictions, and shall open them with the key of charity.

Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 22.

MIS-BEAR, v. } A. S. Mis-bær-an, misbor-en;
MR'SBORN. } Dut. Mis-baeren.

To bear, or to carry, to support, to conduct, wrongly or wrongfully; to misconduct, to misbehave.

Misborn, (in Spenser,)—born or produced to ill; unluckily.

Bisshops, abbotes, and priours, thei had misborn tham hie.

R. Brunne, p. 333.

Dan Waryn he les tounes that he held,
 With wrong he mad a res, [rise,] and misberyng of scheld.

Id. p. 336.

Al be it so, that of youre pride and highe presumption and folie, and of youre negligence and unconning, ye have misborn you, and trespassed unto me.

Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

A poore childe, and in the name
 Of thilke, whiche is so misbore,
 We toke, and therto we be swore,
 That none, but onely thou and wee Shall knowe of this priuete.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And drawing nigh him, "Ah, misborn elfe,
 In evill houre thy foes thee hither sent Another's wrongs to wreak upon thy selfe."

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

MIS-BECOME, v. } To become, or come to-MISBECOME'INGLY. } gether, or to convene MISBECOME'INGNESS. } or concur,—wrongly, to ill effect; to be unfit, indecent, unsuitable, inappropriate.

And as you are a king, speake in your state,
 What I haue done, that misbecame my place,
 My person, or my liege's soueraigntie.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 2.

— Those darker humours that Stick misbecomingly on others, on them
 Live in fair dwelling.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous, so misbecoming a gentleman, or any one who pretends to be a rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason, and the conviction of clear arguments.—Locke. Of Education, s. 189.

Were it but one of these mere moral failings, whose unfit-ness or misbecomingness makes all the guilt, I should, possibly, counsel you to wean yourself of it by degrees, whose progress were scarce discernible before its end.

Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 24.

MIS-BEDE, v. } To wrong by word or deed, MISBO'DE. } says Skinner. A. S. Mis- beodan; to bid, command, exert command or authority over, wrongly or wrongfully.

Whan Lowys herd that sawe, that Roberd was so dede, Ageyn right & lawe, tille Henry he misbede.

R. Brunne, p. 104.

He said bot tille a knyght, that Thomas him misbede.

Id. p. 131.

Or who hath you misboden or offended?

Do tell me if that it may be amended.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 911.

MIS-BEFA'LL, v. i. e. to befall, or to fall, happen, come to pass, wrongly, unfortunately.

For elles but a man do so,
 Him maie full ofte misbefall.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

MIS-BEGE'T, v. } i. e. to beget, get, to ac-MISBEGO'TTEN. } quire, to procure, to produce, to generate, wrongly, unlawfully.

Mis-begotten,—as mis-born, (qv.)

Laste yt geode out of kynde thorg child mysbigete.

R. Gloucester, p. 42.

— Which [quarreling] indeede
 Is valour mis-begot, and came into the world,
 When sects and factions were newly borne.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iii. sc. 5.

In the deuotion of a subject's loue
 Tendring the precious safetie to my prince
 And free from other misbegotten hate,
 Come I appealant to this princely presence.

Id. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 1.

For ev'ry boy, with Prior, knows,
 By accident she [Flattery] lost her clothes,
 When Falsehood stole them to disguise
 Her misbegotten brood of lies.

Lloyd. To David Garrick, Esq. (1760.)

MIS-BEHA'VE, v. } i. e. to behave, have,
MISBEHA'VIOUR. } hold, bear, conduct, or manage, wrongly, improperly, unbecomingly.

If anie one doo offend or misbehave himselfe, he is to be corrected and punished by the aduice and order of the residue of the house.

Hooker. Supplie of the Irish Chronicles, an. 1568.

But like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
 Thou pout'st upon thy fortune and thy love.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 3.

Lastly, the cause of this misbehaviour and unworthy deportment was their not understanding the designs of mercy in the several instances of it. They understood thy wonders in Egypt.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 4.

We should remember that those good things alone are to be greatly prized, and deserve our sincerest affection which, if we diligently seek, we shall certainly find, and which we can never lose except by our perverseness and misbehaviour.

Jortin, Dis. 4.

MIS-BEL'VEVE, v. } i. e. to believe, to ac-MISBEL'VEVER. } knowledge, allow, own, MISBEL'VEF. } follow, a wrong or erroneous, rule of life; or rule to guide the moral and religious conduct in life.

Thys thre byssopes bitueyne hem nom hem thus to rede,
 That hii mygte in her owe lond holyor lif lede,
 And without peryl sykerore, than to bylwee there Among mys bylyuede men.

R. Gloucester, p. 239.

— ge prelates soffren
 That lewede men in mysbylyve, liven and deien.

Piers Plouhman, p. 6.

— False reporte so loude range the bell,
 That misbeleefe and false suspicion
 Haue trouth brought to his dampnacion.

Chaucer. The Complaint of the Black Knight.

It was wel proued that he was conuicte as well of dyuers other heresies, as of misbeleefe towards the holy sacrament of the aulter.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 239.

The author proueth y^t if the woorschip of ymages wer ydolatrie than y^e churche beleueing it to be lawful and pleasant to God, were in a misbeleue & in a deadly error.

Id. Ib. p. 144.

Goe, goe into old Titus' sorrowful house,
 And hither hale that misbelieving Moore.

Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act v. sc. 3.

In the following ages of the Church men have been so curious to signifie misbelievers, that they have invented and observed some signs which indeed, in some cases, were true, real appendages of false believers.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

And, comming to her sonne, gan first to scold
 And chyd at him that made her misbeleue.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

My servant follow'd fast, and through a chink
 Perceiv'd the royal captives hand in hand;
 And heard the hooded father mumbling charms,
 That make those misbelievers man and wife.

Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 1.

MIS-BESE'EM, v. i. e. to beseem, to look, to appear, inapt, unfit, unbecoming, inconvenient, unsuitable, improper.

Xenophon pourtraying [in Cyrus] an heroical prince, thought an intent so cruel fitter to be forgotten than rehearsed, as too much misbeseeming a generous nature.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 3. s. 4.

As for his [Perseus] honour in the cities of Greece, they not only continued falling into neglect, but were abrogated by a decree of the Acheans, as too unmeasured, misbeseeming them to give, and affected by him beyond the proportion of his deservings.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6. s. 5.

Neither in discoursing thus do we lay any misbeseeming imputation upon God, the author of that religion; the making so imperfect a revelation no wise being disagreeable to his wisdom, his goodness, or his justice.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

MIS-BESTOW, v. i. e. to be-stow, or to put, lay, or place, to give, to grant—wrongly, wrongfully, improperly, uselessly.

I pray Godde hartely sende that younge man the grace to bestowe his witte and lerning, such as it is, about some better busines then Tindall misbestoweth it now.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 355.

Remember (dear) how loath and slow
 I was to cast a look or smile,
 Or one love-line to mis-bestow,

Till thou hadst chang'd both face and stile.

Carew. To the Jealous Mistress.

There cannot be a better way than to take the misbestowed wealth which they were cheated of from these our prelates.

Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Defence.

MIS-CAL, v. i. e. to call, to name, to denominate, wrongly; to denote by a wrong name.

Whom she with leasings lewdly did miscall
 And wickedly backbite: her name men Schlaunder call.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

A fourth abused name or word, by which the faction is every day practising upon the church, and the government of it is, their miscalling the execution of the laws made in behalf of the church, persecution.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

MIS-CALCULATE, v. i. e. to calculate, (calculi, small stones used in computing) to count, compute, or reckon, wrongly.

After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated.—Arbutnot. On Coins.

MIS-CARRY, v. } i. e. to carry, to convey MISCA'RRIAGE. } or bear along, wrongly, MISCA'RRIAGABLE. } unluckily, unsuccessfully; not as intended, not to the end or event hoped for or aimed at, not to maturity; to fail, to be faulty or deficient; to err.

— For what miscarries

Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
 To th' utmost of a man.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 1.

Why should we be more miscarriageable by such possibilities or hopes, than others.—Bp. Hall. A short Answer.

But he excused himself, laying a great part of the miscarriage on the stubbornness of the Earl of Essex.
Baker. Charles I. an. 1625.

If the tempter miscarries in this his highest, his sharpest, and most violent attack, at that particular hour, or season, in which the temptation is come to an head, it is natural to conceive that he must surcease the conflict, draw off, and give it over, for that time at least.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

If he does not quit himself like a man, and make good his station against this principal assault of his spiritual adversary, a failure or miscarriage then will prove like an oversight in the day of battle, hardly to be recovered by any after-reparation.—Id. Ib.

Without thus reflecting on our past miscarriages, and inquiring into their causes, we must for ever fall into the same mistakes, be deceived by the same appearances, surprised by the same artifices, and lose the only consolation (poor as it is) which our past follies and transgressions can afford us, experience.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

MIS-CAST, v. i. e. to cast, to throw, wrongly, improperly; consequentially,—to calculate erroneously.

— It so befelle,
That I at thilke tyme sie
On me, that she miscast hir ele.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

The number is somewhat miscast by Polybius.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 2. s. 8.

MIS-CASUALTY, i. e. casualty, accident, or incident, any thing happening or befalling, wrongly, unfortunately.

Anguish of soul, troubles of mind, distempers of body, losses of estate, blemishes of reputation, miscarriages of children, miscasualties, inquietnesse, pains, griefs, fears, take up our hearts, and forbid us to enjoy, not happinesse, but our very selves.—Bp. Hall. The Character of Man.

MIS-CATHOLICK, i. e. erroneous, blundering mass-priest.

Judge then, reader, whether the catholike bishope that wrote this, or the miscatholike masse-priest that reproves it, be more worthy of Bedleem.

Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. iii. s. 3.

MISCELLANY, adj. } Lat. Miscellaneus; miscellus, miscus, from miscere, to mix or mingle.
MISCELLANY, n. }
MISCELLANEOUS.

Pertaining, belonging, or relating to a mixture or diversity of things; mixed, mingled. A miscellany,—

A mixture, a medley, of things of various kinds or sorts.

As a miscellany, madame, I would invent new tyres, and goe visite courtiers.—B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act iv. sc. 1.

Claudius Aelianus flourished in the reign of Trajan, unto whom he dedicated his Tacticks; an elegant and miscellaneous author.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 8.

But being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion.—Id. Ib.

Sprat, Carew, Sedley, and a hundred more,
(Like twinkling stars the miscellanies o'er.)
Pope. Imitation of Horace to Augustus.

The miscellaneous matter I propose to give in these sheets naturally coincides with the method I have taken of disposing them into distinct papers.—Observer, No. 1.

MIS-CENTRE, v. i. e. to centre or concentrate, to point, wrongly; to direct to or fix on, a wrong point or object.

They were confounded, because they hoped, says thy servant Job; because they had misplaced, miscentred their hopes.—Donne. Devotion, p. 134.

MIS-CHALLENGE, v. i. e. to challenge, demand, summon, (to fight or encounter,) wrongly, wrongfully.

Lo! faitour, there thy meede unto thee take,
The meede of thy mischallenge and abet.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

MISCHANCE, n. } chance; i. e. to chance, to fall, to happen wrongly, unfortunately; to befall unhappily or disastrously.

Ouer Homber he fley a non, to wyte him from mischance.
R. Gloucester, p. 137.

Pees, with mischance and with misaventure,
Our hoste said, and let him tell his tale.
Chaucer. The Freres Tale, v. 6916.

But yet, I say, ariseth, let us daunce,
And cast your widdow's habit to mischaunce.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

And still I hoped to be up aduanc'd,
For my good parts; but still it hath mischaunced.
Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Massinissa coming to Cirta, before any news of the king's mischance was there arrived, called out the chief of the city to parley.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. v. c. 3. s. 18.

"For charity," reply'd the matron, "tell What sad mischance those pretty birds befel."
"Nay, no mischance," the savage dame reply'd,
"But want of wit in their unerring guide,
And eager haste, and gaudy hopes, and giddy pride."
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Farewell honour's empty pride!
Thy own nice, uncertain gust,
If the least mischance betide,
Lays thee lower than the dust.
Byrom. An Hymn on Simplicity.

maie gather honie, yet by prooffe the spider thereout suckes mischeueous poison.—Gascoigne. To the Reuerende Deuines.

Phy, agony of age,
Phy, ouerthrowe of youth,
Phy, mirroure of mischeuousnesse,
Phy, tipe of al vntruth.—Id. Complaynt of Phylomene.

He that kills may be killed, and he that does injury may be mischieved; he that invades another man's right must venture the loss of his own; and when I put my brother to his defence, he may chance drive the evil so far from himself, that it may reach me.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

Well (quoth he) [Cleomenes] it is in you to miscall me and raile upon me as you do in word; but it is in me to plague and mis-chief you indeed.—Holland. Plut. p. 379.

And every one threw forth reproches rife
Of his mischievous deedes, and sayd that hee
Was the disturber of all civill life,
The enemy of peace, and authour of all strife.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

Tisaphernes circumventing the chief commanders by fine slights, did mischievously entrap them, to the extreme danger of the army.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. iii. c. 10. s. 6.

Generally, in Scripture, it [temptation] denotes not only a bare tryal, but such an one as is attended with a design to hurt or mischieve the people so tryed.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 4.

But singularity is not sincerity, though too often and mis- chievously mistaken for it.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 4.

Enough for that, if rugged in its course,
The verse but rolls with vehemence and force;
Or nicely pointed in the Horatian way,
Wounds keen, like Sirens mischevously gay.
Hart. Essay on Satire, (1730.)

MIS-CHOOSE, v. i. e. to choose, to take, to select, wrongly, erroneously.

This mischance did not happen as any token that God was displeased with our enterprise, (as the sequel shewed,) but that we mischose the daie, attempting so great a worke vpon his daie of rest.—Stow. Elizabeth, an. 1596.

MIS-CIBLE, i. e. that may or can be mixed; from Lat. Miscere, to mix.

These had kept the landed and monied interests more separated in France, less miscible, and the owners of the two distant species of property not so well disposed to each other as they are in this country.—Burke. French Revolution.

MIS-CITE, v. } i. e. to cite, to bring forward
MISCITATION. } or produce, to quote, wrongly,
erroneously.

If Satan have mis cited the Psalme (hee shall give his angels charge over thee) for temptation, may not we make use of it for the comfort of protection?
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 1.

What a miscitation is this? "Moses commanded." The law was God's, not Moses's.—Bp. Hall. Contemplations, b. iv.

MIS-CO'GNIZE, v. Fr. Mesconnoistre, to mis- understand. See COGNITION.

The good never intervert, nor miscognize the favour and benefit which they have received.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 893.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 18.

It was a general misfortune and miscomputation of that time that the party had so good an opinion of their own reputation and interest.—Clarendon.

MIS-CONCEIVE, v. } i. e. to conceive, to MISCONCEIVER. } comprehend, take or MISCONCEIT. } hold, (met. within the MISCONCEPTION. } mind,) to understand, to think—wrongly, erroneously, falsely; to mistake.

He which that misconceiveth oft misdemeeth.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,284.

That through the helpe of his faire hornes on hight,
And misty dampe of misconceyving night,
And eke through likenesse of his goatish beard,
He did the better counterfeite aright.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

No, misconceyued, Jone of Arce hath beene
A virgin from her tender infancie.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act v. sc. 4.

Why I come now to put him in possession
Of his fair fortunes; what a misconceiver 'tis!
Beaum. & Fletch. The Passionate Madman, Act ii. sc. 1.

The next day, as he on his way did ride,
Full of melancholie and sad misfare
Through misconceit.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

It cannot be, that our knowledge should be other than an heap of misconception and error, and conceits as impertinent as the toys we delight in.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 8.

The apostles beating upon that general misconceit of the Jews, about the kingdom of the Messiah, in the preceding chap. v. 6. asked Christ, whether he would at that time restore the kingdom to Israel.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 2.

MIS-CONCLU'SION, i. e. wrong, erroneous conclusion, determination, decision.

Away, then, with all the false-positions and misconclu- sions, all the fantastical, or wicked thoughts of the world.
Bp. Hall. The Fashions of the World.

MIS-CONFIDENT, i. e. having or placing confidence, faith, or trust, wrongly, erroneously.

Brethren, your not omniscient eyes shall see that my eyes are so lynccean, as to see you proudly misconfident.
Bp. Hall. Answer to the Vindication of Smectymnus.

MIS-CONJECTURE, v. i. e. to conjecture, to guess, to divine, to imagine, wrongly, erroneously.

I find it to be ordinary, that many pressing and fawning persons do misconjecture of the humours of men in authority.—Bacon. On Church Controversies.

I hope they will plausibly receive our attempts or candidly correct our misconjectures.—Brown. Vulgar Errors.

MIS-CONSECRATED, i. e. consecrated, hallowed, dedicated, devoted, to a wrong, to an evil, purpose.

Our prayers were the gale, yea the gust, that tore these misconsecrated flags and sayles; and scattered and drencht those presumptuous piles.—Bp. Hall. Defeat of Crueltie.

MIS-CONSEQUENCE. A wrong, an erroneous consequence.

Satan and the profane world are very inventive of such shapes and colours as may make truth odious, drawing monstrous mis-consequences out of it, & belying the practices of Christians, making their assemblies horrible and vile by false imputations.—Leighton. Com. on Peter, iii. 8.

MIS-CONSTRUE, v. } i. e. To construe, to MISCO'NSTRUER. } explain, to inter-MISCONSTRU'CTION. } pret, wrongly, erroneously.

But take this: that ye lovers oft eschew,
Or else done of good entention,
Full oft thy ladie woll it misse construe,
And deem it harme in her opinion.

Chaucer. Troilus & Creside, b. i.

As if thei shold by misse construction of the scriptures brynge vp and beleue that Christ were one God, and egall with his Father and with the Hooly Goost, if the truth were otherwise indee.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 160.

Which those misconstruers are fain to understand of the distinct notifications given to the angels, concerning this almighty work.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. c. 10.

As though Burdet were forgotten, that was for a word spoken in hast cruelly beheaded, by the misconstruing of the laws of this realme for the prince's pleasure.

Stow. Edw. V. an. 1477.

The meaning of which providence, should we misconstrue, we should frustrate our grand and last remedy, and perish not for want, but for misapplication of the means of life.

South, vol. xi. Ser. 3.

Although our apostle in his Epistle calls the Gospel the law of liberty, yet to prevent any misconstruction thereof, as though it allowed a liberty to sin, we no where find more strict and severe passages against it than in this Epistle, both with respect to sins of commission, and sins of omission.—Stillington. vol. iv. Ser. 10.

When the apostle had been speaking of the righteousness of God displayed by the wickedness of man; he was not unaware of the misconstruction to which this representation was liable, and which it had, in fact, experienced: which misconstruction he states thus,—“We be slanderously reported, and some affirm, that we say, let us do evil that good may come.”—Paley, Ser. 20.

MIS-CONTENT. Fr. Mescontenter, i. e. discontented, dissatisfied, displeased.

When they could not persuade the people to beleue this, they went to John, making theyr complaynte to hym, thinking that he would be miscontented therewith, & by some meanes to stay this their grieve and grudge.

Udal. John, c. 3.

She was not miscontente that he samed lital to regarde Jacob's welle, whiche she had in great reuerence, neither yet did she mocke the bold sayings of hym.—Id. Ib. c. 4.

Although her highness [Q. Elizabeth] is not miscontented that either her own face or the said king's should be painted or portrayed; yet to be joined with the said king or with any other prince that is known to have made any request in marriage to her majesty, is not to be allowed, (an. 1561.)

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i.

MIS-CORDEN, i. e. to be discordant, to disagree.

Austen witnesseth of an heretike that in his firste beginninge, he was a man right experte in reasons, and swete in his wordes and the werkes miscorden.

Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

MIS-COVETING, i. e. coveting, wishing or desiring, wrongfully.

She maketh folke compasse and cast
To taken other folkes thing,
Through robberie, or miscounting.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

MIS-COUNSELLED, Fr. Mesconseiller; i. e. counselled, advised, designed, wrongly, erroneously.

For everie thing that is begun with reason
Will come by readie meanes unto the end;
But things miscounselled must needs miswend.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

MIS-COUNT, v. Fr. Mescompter, i. e. to count, to reckon, to calculate, wrongly, erroneously; to miscompute.

And if so be, that he miscounteth,
To make in his answer a faile,
There shall none other thyng auaile
The kynge saith, but he shall be deade,
And lese his goodes, and his head.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Yet God be thanked there was not a fairer season in many yeres, & at the last the astronomers for their excuse sayd that in their computacion they had mistaken & miscounted in their nomber an hundreth yeres.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 15.

MISCREANT. } Fr. Mescreant, mescreance; MISCREANCE. } It. Miscredente, miscredenza; believing, (credens), wrongly, erroneously. Holinshed writes miscredents.

Misbelieving; i. e. believing—wrongly, erroneously; holding wrong principles of religious faith; applied opprobriously to infidels as, consequently, unprincipled, wicked people.

This Robert by his manhode dyd many notable actes, and specially at the wynnynge of the citey of Acon vpon the myscreantes & Turkes, and was chosen Kynge of Jerusalem.

R. Brunne, p. 102. Note.

I not what helpeth that clergie
Which maketh a man to do folie,
And nameliche of nicromance,
Which stont vpon the miscreance.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

This miscreant now thus baptised hath received this outward signe and sacrament, as well as the most faythful man beleuyng.—Fryth. Workes, p. 91.

Make a dystynccion and seuteraunce betwene that one catholyque church of one bellefe and faith on the one parte, and al miscreant painyms, al false Jewes, al false heritikes and al sedicious scismatikes vpon the other part.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 774.

But through this and other their miscreaunce,
They maken many a wrong chevisaunce,
Heaping up waves of wealth and woe.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

— For what I speake

My body shall make good vpon this earth
Or my diuine soule answer it in heauen,
Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 1.

Your sermon to vs of a dungeon appointed for offenders and miscredents.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 4.

Can any of these thriving miscreants be esteemed or called happy in such a condition? Is their mind clear, their conscience calm and quiet, and their thoughts generally undisturbed?—South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

Do you think it possible, that mere exhortation alone, or even the most awful denunciations of punishment, would ever have brought such miscreants as those to real repentance and reformation?—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

MIS-CREATED, i. e. created, made, formed, framed, wrongly, foully, improperly, unlawfully, unnaturally.

Eftsoones he tooke that miscreated faire,
And that false other spright.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

And counsel'd him abstaine from perilous fight;
For nothing might abash the villein bold,
Ne mortall steele emperce his miscreated mould.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 7.

Whence and what art thou, execrable shape,
That dar'st, though grim and terrible, advance
Thy miscreated front athwart my way
To yonder gates? Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

'Twas thus great Nature's herald blazon'd high
That fair original impress, which she bore
In state sublime; e'er miscreated art,
Offspring of sin and shame, the banner seiz'd,
And with adulterate pageantry defil'd.

Mason. The English Garden.

MIS-CREDULITY, appears to be used by Hall as equivalent to Mis-belief.

As then we would condemn him of much folly, that should professe to trust the clock rather than the sun; so we cannot but justly tax the miscredulity of those who will rather trust to the Church then to the scripture.

Bp. Hall. Select Thoughts, § 6.

MIS-DATE, v. i. e. to date, to give, mark, note, or fix the time, wrongly, erroneously.

In hoary youth Methusalems may die;
O how misdated on their flatt'ring tombs!
Narcissa's youth has lectur'd me thus far.

Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

MIS-DAUBED, i. e. daubed, smeared over, covered over, wrongly, improperly.

All our claim, all our endeavour is, only the reforming and repairing of an old church, faulty in some mouldered stones, and misdaubed with some untempered and lately laid mortar.—Bp. Hall. Letter to a Worthly Knight.

MIS-DEEM, v. } i. e. to deem or doom, to MISDE'EMING, n. } think, to judge, to determine, to decide, wrongly, erroneously.

He which that misconceiveth oft misdemeth.

Chaucer. The Squires Tale, v. 10.384.

Covered with darknes and misdeeming night
Them both together laid, to joy in vaine delight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

Who, after that he had faire Una lorne
Through light misdeeming of her loialtie.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 4.

That day returns, when Fortune's partial hand
To his proud brother gave the whole command,
How the revolting Gods against him join'd,
When to a private state reduc'd, he pin'd,
And saw his friends misdeem'd in crowds resort,
To bask beneath the sunshine of the Court.

Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. ii.

With friendly arm, they rais'd us: nathles some Among our old and stubborn swains misdeem'd,
And envy'd, who enrich'd them.—Dyer. The Fleece, b. iii.

MIS-DEME'AN, v. } To demean, to conduct, MISDEME'ANOUR. } to behave, to deport or comport, to manage—wrongly, improperly, criminally.

Neither did the townsmen of S. Albons and the tenants of other townes and villages thereabout that belonged to the abbe of S. Albons, thus outrageously misdeemean themselves.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1381.

And [Bonosus] being hanged for some misdeemeanour, they jeasted on him, amphoram pendere, non hominem, that a barrell or tankard hung there, not a man.

Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. s. 5.

The consideration of this, that God takes a particular notice of our personal misdeemeanors, should engage us to set about a particular amendment.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 12.

A crime, or misdeemesnor is an act committed, or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 1.

MIS-DEPART, v. i. e. to depart, to part, to distribute, wrongly, improperly.

Thou blamest Crist and sayst ful bitterly
He misdeparteth richesse temporal.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4527.

MIS-DERIVE, v. i. e. to derive, to draw down, to deduce, to train, wrongly.

This practice of impropriation which was first set on foot by unjust and sacrilegious bulls from Rome, is justly offensive both to God and good men; as mis-deriving the well-meant devotions of charitable and pious souls into a wrong channel.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. Case 7.

MIS-DESE'RT, i. e. through my having deserved, or having merited, wrong, ill fortune; or not having merited good, or good fortune.

— My haplesse case

Is not occasioned through my misdesert,
But through misfortune, which did me abuse
Unto this shame, and my young hope subvert.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

MIS-DEVOTION, i. e. wrong, erroneous devotion (to godliness;) misdirected piety.

In regard of that miserable blindness and mis-devotion, which it must needs draw in after it, it is so hainous, as may well deserve our utmost opposition.

Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, pt. ii. c. 12. s. 3.

We cry out sacrilege and misdevotion against those who in zeal have demolish'd the dens and cages of her unclean wallowings.—Milton. An Apology for Smeectymnuus.

MIS-DI'ET, v. i. e. to diet, to feed, wrongly, improperly, to excess.

Certainly this great body, by mis-dieting and willfull disorder, contracted these spirituall diseases under which we languish.—Bp. Hall. The Balm of Gilead.

Full of diseases was his [Gluttony] carcas blew,
And a drie dropsie through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiet daily greater grew.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4. s. 23.

MIS-DIGHT, i. e. dight, prepared, provided, furnished, wrongly, unfitly.

Despised nature suit them once aright,
Their bodie to their coate, both now mis-dight.

Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 7.

MIS-DIRE/CTED, i. e. directed, ruled, ordered, guided, wrongly, erroneously.

Does he resist their genuine force?
His temper takes some forward course;
Till passion, misdirected, sighs
For weeds, or shells, or grubs, or flies.

Shenstone. The Progress of Taste, pt. iv.

MIS-DISPOSITION, i. e. wrong, evil disposition, arrangement, direction, inclination.

Besides supernatural delusions, there is a deceit of the sight; whether through the indisposition of the organ or the distance of the object, or the mis-disposition of the medium. Bp. Hall. The Deceit of Appearance.

Neither are his [the wicked man] mis-dispositions only sinful, but those his very actions and endeavours, which in another man would be harmless, are in him no other than sin.—Id. Hard Texts of Scripture. Proverbs, xxi. 4.

MIS-DISTINGUISH, v. The quotation explains the word.

Rightly to distinguish is by conceits of minde to sever things different in nature, and discern where they differ. So that if we imagine a difference where there is none,—because wee distinguish where we should not, it maye not bee denied that wee mis-distinguish.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. 3. § 3.

MIS-DO, v. } A. S. Misdo-en, misdæd.
MISDO'ER. } To do or act, to conduct or MISDO'ING, n. } behave, wrongly, criminally; to MISDE'ED. } transgress, to offend, to sin.

Away! dogter Cordeille, wider schal ich now fle?
 So much iche habbe the mys do, that y ne dar the y se.
R. Gloucester, p. 35.

The dradde he sore of the deth, & hys mysdede of thogte sore.—Id. p. 391.

I rede thou mak amendes of that grete misdede.
R. Brunne, p. 291.

In that thing that thei bacbiten of you as of misdoeris, thei biholden you of good workis.—Wiclif. 1 Petir, c. 2.

Thei answeriden and seiden to him, if this were not a mysdoere, we hadden not bitaken him to thee.
Id. Jon, c. 18.

For Salomon saith: He is more worth, that repreveth or chidith a fool for his folie, shewing him semblaunt of wrath, than he that supporteth him and preiseth him in his mis-doing, and laugheth at his folie.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Yet held it more humane, more heavenly first,
 At least to try, and teach the erring soul,
 Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Misled.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

At length a maid might haue passed through the land with a bag full of gold, and not haue met a misdoer to have bereft her of the same.

Holinshed. William the Conquerour, an. 1087.

Pandulph, a lawier, and Durant, a templer, comming vnto King John, exhorted him, with manie terrible words, to leaue his stubborne disobedience to the Church, and to reforme his misdoings.—Id. K. John, an. 1211.

For malefactors, whilst that their misdeeds
 Repentance expiates, made happy so,
 Do (as from beds) to heaven from scaffolds go.
Stirling. Domes-day. The tenth Houre.

Like catiff vile, that for misdeed
 Rides with his face to rump of steed.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

MIS-DOUBT, v. } i. e. to doubt, to fear, to MISDO'UBT, n. } suspect, wrongly or without MISDOUBTFUL. } cause; also, to fear or suspect wrong or ill.

Therefore misdoubting least he should misguyde
 His former malice to some new assay,
 He cast to keepe himselfe so safely as he may.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3.

If ever heaven's high blessings met in one man,
 And there erected to their holy uses
 A sacred mind fit for the services,
 Built all of polisht honor, 'twas in this man:
 Misdoubt him not.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act iii. sc. 1.

Yorke. Now Yorke, or neuer, steale thy fearful thoughts,
 And change misdoubt to resolution.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

She gan to cast in her misdoubtful mynde,
 A thousand feares, that love-sicke fancies faine to fynde.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 6.

His leave thus taken, on his way he went
 With heavy heart, and full of discontent,
 Misdoubting much, and fearful of th' event.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

MIS-DRAWING, i. e. drawing or dragging, pulling—wrongly; the wrong way.

It mote nedes be so (quod I) for the realme ne should not seme blisfull, if there were a yoke of misdrawynges in diuers partes.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

MIS-DREAD, v. i. e. to dread, wrong, or ill.

Needs me then hope, or doth me need mis-dread.
Bp. Hall. Defiance to Envy.

MIS-EASE. } i. e. want of, destruction of,
MISE'ASY. } ease; pain, penury.

So that he moste for myseise aweil at the ende.
R. Gloucester, p. 34.

Sithen he went aboute, kirkes vp to raise,
 Abbayes forto help, were fallen to miseyse.
R. Brunne, p. 35.

Euery where, and in alle thingis, I am taught to be fillid, and to hungre and to abound, and to suffre myseiste. [pen-uriam.]—Wiclif. Filipensis, c. 4.

Standyng is me beste, vnneth maie I ligge for pure mis-easie sorowe.—Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

I go without retorning to the londe of misese & darke-nesse, wheras is the shadowe of deth.
Id. The Persones Tale.

MIS-EDITION. A wrong edition, an edition erroneously printed.

Thus saith the Lord the Holy One of Israel who hath made things to come; following a mis-edition of the vulgar which perverts the sense, by making a wrong stop in the sentence.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. Case 10.

MIS-EMPLOY, v. } i. e. to engage, to oc-MISEMPLOYMENT. } cupy, to busy, to exercise, wrongly, uselessly, improperly, to an ill purpose.

This year also he made proclamation to redress the mis-employment of lands, or goods given to charitable uses.
Baker. K. James, an. 1622.

For if God puts it in the prince's power to be able to preserve, undoubtedly the same power, misemployed, will be as able to destroy society.—South, vol. x. Ser. 7.

If any leisure time he had from power,
 Because 'tis sin to misemploy an hour,
 His business was, by writing to persuade
 That kings were useless and a clog to trade.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

The regrets of a Prince, for having lost a day, were noble and generous; but had he intended to have spent it in acts of generosity to his greedy courtiers, it was better lost than misemployed after that manner.

Hume. Principles of Morals, s. 2.

MISER. } Fr. Misérable; It. Mise-
MISERABLE. } rabile; Sp. Miserable; Lat.
MISERABLENESS. } Miserabilis, from Miser, (of MISERABLY. } uncertain origin,—perhaps MISERATION. } the Goth. Missa, A. S. Mis.) MISERY. } Miser (by our old writers)

is applied generally to—
 A wretched, unhappy person, one in the deepest affliction or distress;—the common usage is more restricted.

One who afflicts or distresses himself, denies himself the comforts and conveniences of life, through covetousness or parsimony; one who is covetous or parsimonious to excess.

Miseration, i. e. commiseration, (qv.)

Thus must I myser Hue till shee by friendly ruth,
 Doe pittie mee hir loouing thrall whose deeds shall trie his truth.
Turberville. The Lover declareth how first he was taken, &c.

Miserableness
 Hath brought in distress.—Skelton. Why come ye not, &c
 Driuen I was to harnesse then againe,
 Miserably my death for to desire.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

God of his miseration
 Send better reformation.—Skelton. Why come ye not, &c.
 Go to nowe; ye ryche men: wepe, and howle for your miseries that shall come vpon you.
Geneva Bible, 1561. James, v. 1.

The miser threw himselfe as an offall,
 Streight at the foot in base humilitee,
 And cleped him his leige, to hold of him in fee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

— On me exercise not Thy hatred for this misery befallen,
 On me already lost, mee than thyself
 More miserable.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

For there mentioning happiness and miserableness after death, (where he might have showed his skill, if he had any,) he plainly betrays himself an arrant naturalist.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 642.

— The King's exchequer,
 Nor all his wealthy Indies, could not draw me
 Through half these miseries this piece of pleasure Might make me leap into.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act i. sc. 10.

Our language, by a peculiar significance of dialect, calls the covetous man the miserable man.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 6.

Their galleons, galleasses, gallies, urcas, and zabras, were miserably shatter'd, having their hulls pierced through and through, their oars and rudders cut away, their tackling all rent, and their masts broken.

Oldys. Life of Sir Walter Raleigh, p. 46.

Nothing does or can leave a more abiding impression upon the mind than misery escaped.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

For the sake of collecting what is never to be used, and adding to his beloved heap, the miser will forego the comforts, the conveniences, and almost the necessities of existence, and voluntarily submit all his days to the penances and austerities of a mendicant.—Horne. Works, vol. v. Dis. 1.

I see a column of slow rising smoke
 O'ertop the lofty wood, that skirts the wild.
 A vagabond and useless tribe there eat
 Their miserable meal.
Cowper. Task, b. i.

In Misery's darkest cavern known,
 His useful care was ever nigh,
 Where hopeless Anguish pour'd his groan,
 And lonely Want retir'd to die.
Johnson. On the Death of Mr. Robert Levet.

Yet misery marks him of our kind,
 We see him lost, alone, afraid;
 And pangs of body, griefs in mind,
 Pronounce him Man, and ask our aid.—Crabbe. Woman.

MIS-ERECTED, i. e. erected, or raised, wrongly, improperly.

And will cause those miserected altars to be beaten down to the ground.

Bp. Hall. Hard Texts of Scripture. Amos, iii. 15.

MISERICORDE. Fr. Miséricorde; It. Lat. and Sp. Misericordia. Misericors est cujus cor miseret, whose heart feels or is sensible of the misery or unhappiness of others, one who compas-sionates or sympathizes with them. See the description by Chaucer.

The spices of misericorde ben for to lene, and eke for to yeve, and for to foryeve and relesse, and for to haue pitie in herte, and compassion of the mischief of his even Cristen, and also to chastise ther as nedes is.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale, p. 163.

And sonne, if that thou wolt recorde
 The vertue of misericorde,
 Thou sighe neuer thilke place,
 Where it was vsed, lacke grace.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

MIS-FALL, v. Dut. Mis-vallen; to fall, happen, or come to pass, wrongly, injuriously,
 unfortunately.

Although thee ones on a time misfille,
 Whan Vulcanus had caught thee in his las.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2390.

Thereat she gan to triumph with great boast,
 And to upbrayd that chaunce which him misfell,
 As if the prise she gotten had almost
 With spightfull speeches, fitting with her well.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

MIS-FARE, v. } A. S. Mis-far-an, deviare, MISFA'RE, n. } errare, i. e. to fare, to go MISFA'RING, n. } wrong, the wrong way; to & how his schippis misferd, he turned onto that tide.

Id. p. 158.

This maiden, whan she it herde,
 And sigh this thyng howe it misferde:
 Anon she wist what it ment,
 And all the cause howe it went.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And in his wide great mouth away her bear
 Crying aloud to shew her sad misfare
 Unto the knights, and calling oft for ayde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 3.

For all the rest do most-what far amis,
 And yet their owne misfaring will not see.
Id. Colin Clout's come home again.

MIS-FA' SHIONED, i. e. fashioned, formed, or made, shaped or moulded, wrongly.

A thing in reason impossible, thorough their misfashioned preconcept, appeared unto them no less certain, than if Nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God.—Hakewill. On Providence.

MIS-FEIGN, v. i. e. to feign, to invent, contrive, or pretend, (a likeness or resemblance,) wrongly, wrongfully.

But lo! the virgin comes; who all this while Amazed stands, herself so mockt to see
By him, who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to bee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

MIS-FORMED, i.e. formed or framed, made, fashioned, or shaped—ill.

But, when he saw his labour all was vaine,
With that misformed spright he backe returned againe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

MIS-FORTUNE, v. } i.e. to fortune, to hap-MISFORTUNE, n. } pen or cause to be or happen, wrongly, unluckily, unhappily. And mis- fortune, noun,—
Ill luck, ill hap; calamity, affliction.

The remnaüt of ye captiuite are there in ye lande in great misfortune and rebuke.—Bible, 1551. Nehemiah, c. 1.

Forthy great care she tooke, and greater feare,
Least that it should her turne to fowle reprehensive,
And sore reproch, whenso her father deare
Should of his dearest daughter's hard misfortune heare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

The Queene, after marriage, was conceiued with childe, but it misfortun'd.—Stow, Pref.

Dark shades become the portrait of our time:
Here weeps Misfortune, and there triumphs Crime!
Waller. To my Lady Morton.

Yet ev'n on this her load Misfortune flings,
To press the weary minutes' flagging wings;
New sorrow raises as the day returns,
A sister sickens, or a daughter mourns.
Johnson. The Vanity of Human Wishes.

MIS-FRAMING, n. i.e. forming, fashioning, shaping—wrongly, evilly.

Some other subtle shrew that is of his counsaile deceiued him in the misframing of hys matter more towarde diusion than vnitye.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 874.

MIS-GET, v. i.e. to get, to procure, to produce —wrongly, unlawfully, unjustly.

For of the false Moabites,
Forth with the strength of Amonites,
Of that thei were first misget,
The people of God was ofte vpset
In Isreal and in Judee.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Leave, faytor, quickly that misgotten weft
To him that hath it better iustifyde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

MIS-GIVE, v. } i.e. to give or grant wrongly;
MISGIVING, n. } to give way, to yield, to relax,
through doubt or fear of wrong or evil; to fail, through fearfulness or timidity, want of courage or confidence.

— But yet to let her go
His herte misgave him evermo.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

Great joy he promised to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return, so long delay'd;
Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,
Misgave him.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

But touching divination, and the misgiving of minds, we shall speak more when we handle in generall the nature of mindes, and soules, and spirits.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 988.

If we find differences in ourselves sometimes, it argues that grace is not our owne. It is our frailty, that those services, which we are forward to, aloofe off, we shrink at neere hand, and fearfully missegive.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Calling of Moses.

No man should reckon every doubting or misgiving of his heart, about the safety of his spiritual estate, inconsistent with that confidence towards God which is here spoken of in the text.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

There is nothing, I will venture to say, in the whole compass of what is called natural religion or modern philosophy, that can in the smallest degree tend to allay or remove these

Let me obtain forgiveness of thee, Samson,
Afford me place to show what recompence
Towards thee I intend for what I have misdone, Misguided.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Whosoever deceives a man, does not only do all that he can to ruin him, but which is worse, to make him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, to cause an error in his choice too;
the misguidance of which must naturally engage him in those courses that directly tend to his destruction.
South, vol. i. Ser. 12.

An ambitious, or rather a misguided prince, arose, who deemed all these privileges to be concessions of his predecessors, revocable at pleasure.—Hume, pt. i. Ess. 9.

My selfe a prince, by fortune of my birth,
 Neere to the king in blood, and neere in loue,
 Till you did make him mis-interpret me.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act iii. sc. 1.

However infamy or envy may work in other men to do her fretful will against this discourse, yet the experience of your own uprightness mis-interpreted, will put ye in mind to give it free audience and generous construction.

Milton. Doctrine of Divorce. To the Parliament.

Their mis-interpretation of the law alluded unto (Deuteronomy) urges no less.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 2.

He is no better than a Pharisee, and understands not the gospel; whom as a mis-interpreter of Christ I openly protest against.—Milton. Doctrine of Divorce. To the Parliament.

And saints have freedom to digress,
 And vary from them as they please;
 Or misinterpret them by private Instructions.

Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

Supposing there be some few obscure texts, which unstable persons may be apt to misinterpret to their own and others' disquiet; yet is it not fit that the whole tenour, the whole design and perpetual aim of scripture, should be the interpreter of particular passages?—Jortin, Diss. 2.

Mr. Hume's great principle with respect to the origin of our ideas, which (as I before hinted) is only that of Locke under a new form, asserts the same doctrine, with greater conciseness, but in a manner still less liable to misinterpretation.—Stewart. Philosophical Essays, Ess. 1. c. 3.

VOL. II.

MIS

MIS-INTRE'AT, v. i. e. to entreat or treat, to deal with, evilly, injuriously, harmfully.

In the increase of the vngodlye there is mysorder.

Bible, 1551. Proverbes, c. 15.

But I mervle the lesse that thies misorders be amonges some in the court; for commonlie in the contrie also everie where, innocencie is gone, bashfulness is vanished.

Ascham. The Schole-Master, b. i.

Calphurnius being thus at quiet on that side, intended wholie to reforme all misorders amongst the Britains.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Ethodius.

He [David] purged his court also in such wise of all vicious rule and misordered customes, that his whole familie was giuen onellie to the exercise of virtue.—Id. Ib. David.

It was enacted, that all persons above the age of fourteene yeares, being taken begging, vagrant & wandering mis-orderly, should be apprehended, whipped, and brent through the gristle of the right eare.—Stow. Q. Elizabeth, an. 1572.

MIS-OWNING, n. i. e. owning, acknowledging, or avowing—wrongly, erroneously.

He abiured all articles belonging to the crafts of negro-mancie or misowning to the faith, in the presence of the Archb. of Canterbury.—Stow. Hen. VI. an. 1440.

MIS-PASSION, i. e. wrong passion or feeling.

But I say unto you, that not only the outward act of murder is a breach of the law, but the inward mis-passion of the heart also.—Bp. Hall. Hard Texts of Script. Matt. v. 22.

MIS-PAY, v. To dissatisfy, discontent, displease. See APPAY.

Wele I wote alle frayed he went fro that cite Vnto Rome mispayed to the pape's se.—R. Brunne, p. 323.

Wherof loue ought be mispaide.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

MIS-PEND, or rather MIS-SPEND, v. i. e. to spend, to dispose of, to disburse, to distribute—wrongly, improperly, extravagantly; to waste, to exhaust.

And muche wo worth hym. that inwitt myspeyneth.
Piers Plouhman, p. 175.

Alas how vnhappy was this woful hour,
Wherein is thus mispended my seruice,
For mine intent and eke my true labour,
To none effect may come in any wise.

Chaucer. The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

For if transported with a base repose,
Thou didst (as thou dost not) mispend thy prime,
Or what a fair occasion would'st thou lose,
Which after would thee grieve, though out of time.

Stirling. A Parænesis. To Prince Henry.

If your negligence, your riotous mis-spence had empaired your estate, then Satan had impoverished you.

Bp. Hall, Ep. 10. Dec. 2.

Their *mispen*ce of money, and that which farre transcends all treasures, of pretious peerelesse time will ouer-balance all the good, that the most refined stage-plays can produce.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastrix, pt. i. Act 2.

— For the genial moisture, due
To apples, otherwise *mispend*s itself
In barren twigs, and for the expected crop,
Nought but vain shoots and empty leaves abound.

J. Philips. Cider.

MIS-PERSUADE, v. } i. e. to persuade,
MISPERSUASION. } advise, solicit or pre-MISPERSUASIBLENESS. } vail upon—wrongly,
erroneously.

Poor seduced souls they were taught it was piety to be cruel; and were misperswaded to hate and condemn us for that, which have procured their reverence and honour.

Bp. Hall. The Free Prisoner.

Sons of mispersuasibleness, that will not be drawn or persuaded by the tendered mercies of God.

Leighton. Com. Peter, i. 14, 16.
1298

MIS

Wherefore sith the world hath had in these men so fresh experience how dangerous such active errors are, it must not offend you though, touching the sequell of your present misperswasions, much more be doubted, then your owne intents and purposes doe haply ayme at.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, Pref.

So that the whole point of sinning, or not sinning, in following an erroneous conscience, lies here: whether the man that is thus mispersuaded is to be blamed, or not blamed, for his mispersuasion.—Sharp, vol. ii. Disc. of Conscience.

MIS-PLACE, v. } To place, put, or station—MISPLACING, n. } wrongly, erroneously; to put in a wrong place.

Elb. Proue it before these varlets here; thou honourable man, proue it.

Esc. Doe you heare how he misplaces.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 1.

John hath seiz'd Arthur, and it cannot be
That whiles warme life plays in that infant's veines,
The misplac'd John should entertain an houre,
One minute, nay one quiet breath of rest.

Id. King John, Act iii. sc. 4.

The cross falling of a little accident, the omission of a ceremony, or the misplacing of a circumstance, may determine all fortunes for ever.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

But, with much general reverence for the opinions of these learned commentators, I am persuaded that the stops have been misplaced in the Hebrew manuscripts by the Jewish critics upon the last revision of the text.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

MIS-PRINT, v. i. e. to print, to press, to mark, stamp or infix—wrongly, erroneously.

There might haue bene some ouersight, either in himself or in the printer, by misse writing or by misse prynnyng those figures of algorisme.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 772.

MIS-PRIZE, or } Fr. Mespriser, to mis-
MISPRIZE, v. } prize, is literally to mistake;
MISPRISING, n. } and *mispri*son, mistaking.
MISPRISION. } By old statutes, justices have power to amend the *mispri*son of clerks or others in writing one letter or one syllable too much or too little. (See Rastal, title—Amendments.) Pris is the past part. of the Fr. Prendre, to take. A prize is something taken; and, consequentially, valued: to prize is, thus,—to value, to esteem highly: hence *mispri*se is to set a wrong price or value upon, to value too little, to disesteem, to disregard, to disrespect, to neglect, to contemn. In English law, besides the usage above mentioned, *mispri*sons and contempts, in certain cases, were and still are considered as terms of equivalent import.

To *mispri*se,—to mistake; (met.) to misapprehend, to misunderstand; consequentially, to set a wrong or inadequate price or value upon, to disesteem, &c.

And see APPREHEND, APPRIZE, HAND, &c.

Where they haue hadde occasion to speake of hyge myspriesion or of treason.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 964.

And eke reward the wretch for his mesprise

As may be worthy of his haynous sin.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

These cautions were exceeding weighty, if Xerxes's obstinacy had not *mispri*sed them.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 6. s. 2.

To pluck his indignation on thy head
By the *mispri*sing of a maide too vertuous
For the contempt of empire.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iii. sc. 2.

It is a foul *mispri*son in those men that make account of themselves as their own, and therefore that they are the absolute lords of their life.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 10.

See whither *mispri*son of scripture may mislead us.
Id. Ib. Addit. Case 1.

Who, for a few *mispri*sons of wit,
Are charg'd by those who ten times worse commit.

Butler. Upon Critics.

The aged Harper, howsoe'er
His only friend, his harp, was dear,
Liked not to hear it ranked so high Above his flowing poesy;
Less liked he still, that scornful jeer
*Mispri*sed the land he loved so dear.

Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 5.

MIS-PROCEEDING, i. e. wrong proceeding.

All which errors and misproceedings they doe fortify and intrench by an addicted respect to their own opinions, and an impatience to hear contradiction or argument.

Bacon. Of Church Controversies.

MIS-PROFESS, v. To profess, to declare, to avow—wrongly.

Keep me back, O Lord, from them who misprofess arts of healing the soul, or the body, by means not imprinted by thee in the church, or not in nature for the body.

Donne. Devotions, (1624,) p. 86.

MIS-PRONOUNCE, v. i. e. to pronounce, speak, utter, or articulate—wrongly, erroneously.

There while they acted, and over-acted, among other young scholars, I was a spectator, they thought themselves gallant men, and I thought them fools; they made sport, and I laugh'd; they mispronounc'd, and I mislik'd; and to make up the Atticism, they were out, and I hist.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

MIS-PROUD, i. e. proud, haughty, elated—wrongly, to excess.

And now I fall. Thy tough commixture melts, Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud Yorke.

Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 6.

MIS-QUEME, v. i. e. (A. S. Quæman, placere, to queme, to please,) to displease, to offend.

But if any man these misqueme, He shall be bighted as a bere.

The Plowman's Tale, pt. iii. Imputed to Chaucer.

MIS-QUOTE, v. i. e. to quote or cite—wrongly, erroneously.

Looke how we can, or sad or merrily, Interpretation will misquote our lookes.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 2.

[A new form of infidelity] scruples not to pronounce him not merely a man, but a man peccable and fallible in that degree as to have misquoted and misapplied the prophecies of the Old Testament.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

MIS-RAISED, i. e. raised, roused, or excited—wrongly.

Here we were out of danger of this misraised fury, and had leasure to pray for the quenching of those wild fires of contention and causeless malice.

Bp. Hall. The Free Prisoner, s. 5.

MIS-RATE, v. i. e. to rate, to estimate, or esteem—wrongly, erroneously.

There is no way, indeed, wherein we do not thus impose upon ourselves, either assuming false, or misrating true advantages.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 29.

MIS-RECITE, v. } i. e. to recite, to repeat,
MISRECITAL. } to rehearse—wrongly, erroneously.

I have too frequently found, that the alledgers of testimonies do either, through inadvertency, misapprehend, or misrecite the sense of the author they quote.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 477.

The court will take notice of the true statute, and will reject the misrecital as surplusage.

Hale. History of Pleas of the Crown, c. 24.

MIS-RECKON, v. } Dut. Mis-rekenen; i. e.
MISRECKONING, n. } to reckon, count or compute, to calculate—wrongly, erroneously.

But it is a familiar error in Josephus, to misreckon times, which in this point he doth so strangely, as if he knew not how at all to cast any account.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 17. s. 10.

We use to say that mis-reckoning is no payment.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 10.

His heart misreckons him; and therefore when he comes to rectify his account by the measure God takes of things, he finds that in all his fastings and corporal austerities, he has done indeed a great deal of work, but little duty.

South, vol. vi. Ser. 11.

MIS-REHEARSE, v. i. e. to rehearse, recite, or quote—wrongly, erroneously.

He woulde make you wene here, that I bothe misrehearse and misconstrue.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1009.

MIS-RELIGION, i. e. wrong, false religion.

It is not for nothing that note is made of the country of this thankfull leper; he was a Samaritane; the place is knowne and branded with the infamy of a Paganish mis-religion.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Ten Lepers.

MIS-REMEMBER, v. (A common word with Boyle.) To remember, to recollect, or call to memory—wrongly, erroneously.

For of trouthe not the pacifier, but my selfe was ouersene in that place wyth a lytle hast, in misre remembering one worde of his.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1139.

That he who twice upon oath with time of recollection could not remember any thing of such a business, might well a third time misremember somewhat.

Baker. Charles I. an. 1641.

Having enquired of an old experienced tradesman, of whom I bought an excellent mortar of lignum vitæ, how long he had kept the wood in seasoning before I had the mortar, he answered me (if I much misremember not) twenty years.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 449.

MIS-RENDER, v. i. e. to render, to restore, to represent, to translate—wrongly, erroneously.

They [the Psalms] must at least be allowed to contain polished and fashionable expressions in their own language, how coarsely soever they have been mis-rendered in ours.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 297.

MIS-REPORT, v. i. e. to report, to reconvey, to relate—wrongly, erroneously.

For here may a man see y^t misre understanding maketh misre reporting.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 238.

Yf they be such indeed, quod your frende, and that they bee not mistaken or misreported.—Id. Ib. p. 249.

The Duke of Gloucester should be declared publickly a loyal subject, and that none should misreport or dispute the actions of the Duke of York, or any in his company.

Baker. Hen. VI. an. 1459.

But we are not to be guided in the sense we have of that book, either by the misreports of some ancients, or the capricios of one or two neotericks.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 1.

MIS-REPRESENT, v. } i. e. to represent,
MISREPRESENTATION. } to exhibit, to show—wrongly, or wrongfully, erroneously, or injuriously, or unjustly; to give a wrong, a false account, or statement.

In slavish habit, ill-fitted weedes
O'er worn and soil'd;

Or do my eyes misrepresent?—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Nay, if the misrepresentation of the object makes the idolatry, certainly by how much the worse, and more scandalous the misrepresentation is, by so much the grosser and more intolerable must be the idolatry.

South, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Notwithstanding the general influence of ridicule on private and civil life, as well as on learning and the sciences, it has been almost constantly neglected or misrepresented, by divines especially.

Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. iii. Notes.

The Scriptures frequently forbid rash judgments, and censoriousness, and a misrepresentation of other men's actions, and hard thoughts concerning them.—Jortin, Dis. 3.

MIS-REPUTED, i. e. reputed, reckoned, accounted, estimated—wrongly, erroneously.

And in so doing let them not doubt but they shall vindicate the misreputed honour of God and his great Lawgiver, by suffering him to give his own Laws according to the condition of man's nature best known to him.

Milton. The Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 22.

MIS-RULE, } i. e. a wrong or unjust rule, MISRU'LY. } or regulation, or government; perversion or destruction of rule; confusion, turbulence, tumult.

—For as earth, so he the world
Built on circumfluous waters calme, in wide Crystallin ocean, and loud misrule
Of chaos far remov'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

On Monday, the fourth of January, the said Lord of Merry disports came by water to London, & landed at the Tower Wharfe, entered the Tower, and then rode through Tower streete, where hee was received by Sergeant Vawce, Lorde of Misrule to John Mainard, one of the Sherifffes of London.

Stow. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

Shall the controller of proud Nemesis,
In lawlesse rage upbraid each other's vice,
While no man seeketh to reflect the wrong,
And curb the range of his misruly tongue.

Bp. Hall, b. vi. Sat. 1.

Otherwise we may be sure that their great Master of Misrule, Oliver, would never have commissioned them to serve him in that post.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

For loud misrule, the scourge of crimes,
Mix'd with the madness of the times,
And rous'd a rustic war.

Whitehead. Ode for His Majesty's Birthday, June 4, 1767.

MISS, v. } A. S. Miss-ian; Dut. and Ger.
Miss, n. } Miss-en. See AMISS.

MISSING, n. } To want, to feel, see, or perceive, the want of; to be wanting or deficient; to fail, to err, to go wrong, aside, or astray.

And hence, mis, prefixed, is used as equivalent to—wrongly, erroneously, wrongfully, injuriously.

"Missingly noted," (Shakespeare,) i. e. observing him to be missing, to be absent, noted, &c.

In that citty virtue shall never cease,
And felicity no soule shall misre,
Magnifying the name of the Kinge of blisse.

R. Gloucester, p. 584. App.

O rakel hond, to do so foule a mis.
Id. The Manciple's Tale, v. 17, 226.

As for the time yet it lesseth
To hym, whiche to other joye misreth.—Gower. C. A. b. vi.

But for a mys, an other mis
Was yolde, and so full ofte it is. Id. Ib.

Whether by fate, or missing of the way,
Or that she was by werinesse reteind.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

For lo! in Heven, whereas all goodnes is Amongst the angels, a whole legione
Of wicked sprightes did fall from happy bliss;
What wonder, then, if one, of women all did mis?

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

The suddain wonder hath not dryed her eyes, nor charmed her tongue; shee freely confesseth the cause of her griefe to be the missing of her Saviour.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Resurrection.

Cam. Sir, it is three dayes since I saw the Prince; what his happier affayres may be are to me vnknowne: but I haue (missingly) noted, he is of late much retyred from court.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 1.

—Poore Jacke, farewell,
I could haue better spar'd a better man.
O, I should haue a heauy misre of thee,
If I were much in loue with vanity.

Id. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 4.

Like her, who *misre*d her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon.

Dryden. An Essay upon Satire.

MISS. Evidently a contraction of mis-tress. Evelyn gives the earliest notice of one application. Perhaps Miss Prue is contemporary with the first introduction of the name into a Dramatis Personæ.

In this acted ye faire and famous comedian, call'd Roxalana, from ye part she perform'd; and I think it was the last, she being taken to be the Earle of Oxford's misre, (as at this time they began to call lewd women.)

Evelyn. Diary, 9th Jan. 1662.

Miss P. Mother, mother, mother, look you here.
Mrs. Foresight. Fie, misre, how you bawl!—Besides I have told you, you must not call me mother.

Congreve. Love for Love, Act iii.

Gay vanity, with smiles and kisses,
Was busy 'mongst the maids and misses.

Cawthorn. The Temple of Hymen.

Nor deems he wiser him, who gives his noon
To misre, the mercer's plague, from shop to shop
Wand'ring and litt'ring with unfolded silks
The polish'd counter, and approving none,
Or promising with smiles to call again.

Cowper. Task, b. vi.

MISSAL, adj. } Fr. Messel; It. Messale;
MISSAL, n. } Sp. Missal; quod summum
MISSIFICATE, v. } missæ continet, (Minshew.)
The mass-book.

Hall, in his Old Religion, c. 5, "On the Sacrifice of the Mass," has a section on "the Newness of the Missal Sacrifice," and another, that "the Missal Sacrifice is against reason." Milton coins (pro re nata) the verb missificate, to perform mass.

Who would have thought a man could have thwackt together so many incongruous similitudes, had it not been to defend the motley incoherence of a patch'd missal?

Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Defence.

Conceive him, readers, he [Bp. Andrews] would missificate.—Id. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 5.

Vertue met with a fine illuminated MS. of this age, a missal for the use of Salisbury.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

MIS-SAY, v. } Dut. Mis-segghen; i. e. to MISSA'YER. } say or speak—wrongly, erro-MISSA'YING, n. } neously; wrongfully, injuriously, unjustly.

Ne say nought for none euill will,
Thing that is holden still,
It is no worship to missaie,
Thou mayest ensample take of Kaie,
That was sometime for missayeng,
Hated both of old and yeng.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And if that any missayere
Despise women, that thou maist here,
Blame him, and bid him hold him still. Id. Ib.

But, when in vaine to fight she oft assay'd,
She arm'd her tongue, and thought at him to scold:
Nathless her tongue not to her will obey'd,
But brought forth speeches myld when she would have missayd. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

It being the proper scope of this work in hand, not to rip and relate the misdoings of his whole life, but to answer only and refute the missayings of his book.
Milton. Eiconoclastes, Pref.

MIS-SEEK, v. i. e. to seek, search, or look after—wrongly, erroneously.

Nor ye set not a dragge net for an hare;
And yet the thing, that most is your desire,
You do misseeke, with more travell and care.
Wyatt. Of the meane and sure Estate.

MIS-SEEM, v. } i. e. to seem, look, or ap-MISSE'EMING, n. } pear—wrong, ill, unfit, unbecoming.

Sir knight, aread who hath ye thus aray'd,
And eke from whom make ye this hasty flight?
For never knight I saw in such misseeeming plight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

— The gentle squire, with faire Serene,
Met her in such misseeeming foule array.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 6.

In which him chaunced false Duessa meete,
Mine onely foe, mine onely deadly dread;
Who with her witchcraft, and misseeeming sweete,
Inveigled him to follow her desires unmeete.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 7.

MISSEL-BIRD. See the quotation, and MISTLETOE.

For certain it is, that some birds do feed upon the berries of this vegetable, and we meet in Aristotle with one kind of trush called the missel trush, or feeder upon misseltoe.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 6.

MIS-SERVE, v. i. e. to serve wrongly or wrongfully; to neglect or violate the due service.

Of that the kynge his god misserueth,
The people taketh that he deserueth
Here in this worlde. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

You shall inquire whether the good statute be observed, whereby a man may have what he thinketh he hath, and not be abused or misserved in that he buys.
Bacon. Judicial Charge.

MIS-SET, v. A. S. Mis-setten; i. e. to set or sit, to place—wrong, unfitly, unsuitably. "It missate her nought;" i. e. it sat not ill upon her.

For she right there had in present
Unto a lady made present
Of a gold broche, full well wraught,
And certes it missate her nought.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

If, therefore, that boundary of suits [an oath] be taken away, or missel, where shall be the end.
Bacon. Judicial Charge.

MIS-SHA'PEN, v. Dut. Mis-schappen, i. e. shapen, framed or formed—wrong, ill, unsightly;
distorted.

Ther arn mo misshapene among suche beggers
Than of meny other men that on this molde walken.
Piers Ploughman, p. 156.

Her neather partes misshapen, monstrous
Were hidd in water, that I could not see;
But they did seeme more foule and hideous
Than woman's shape men would beleewe to bee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

Else why should this rough thing, who never knew Manners, nor smooth humanity: whose heats
Are rougher than himselfe, and more misshapen,
Thus mildly kneel to me?
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Faithful epherdess, Act i. . 1.

Let not thy heart be hasty to utter any thing before God, that is, in other words, let it not venture to throw out its crude, extemporary, sudden and misshapen conceptions in the face of infinite perfection.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

O! I could better bear an old,
Ugly, diseas'd, mis-shapen scold.
Dorset. The Antiquated Coquet.

The sev'n Geræstians sworn to deeds of hell,
With Lamachus, of foul misshapen frame,
Attend the tyrant, spreading to rude storms
His banner fell. Glover. The Athenaid, b. xvi.

MIS-SHEATH, v. i. e. to sheath or encase—
wrongly, erroneously.

This dagger hath mistaine, for loe his house
Is empty on the backe of Mountague,
And is misheathed in my daughter's bosome.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

MIS-SING, v. i. e. to sing wrong. See Mis-VALUE.

Which he far off like swiftest lightning flung.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island.

He made nevertheless this ordinance; that every twelve years there should be set forth out of this kingdome, two ships appointed to several voyages; that in either of these ships, there should be a mission of three of the fellows, or brethren of Salomon's House.—Bacon. New Atlantis.

— And at once
All his great work to come before him set;
How to begin, how to accomplish best
His end of being on earth, and mission high.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

Wherefore the missioners of France (who are living marks of a true apostolical succession) seek to establish this practice in all places where they teach, that persons of all conditions make some short address to God at the striking of every clock.—Mounlague. Dev. Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 5. s. 3.

Offering to them how much this might trench upon the liberty and safety of the peers, to be in this sort discharged by a letter missive of any subject, without the king's hand.
Baker. Charles I. an. 1626.

Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives from the king, who all hail'd me Thane of Cawdor.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 5.

And send swift arrows from the bounding string,
Were arts the Gods made grateful to my mind.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

And these the missioners our zeal has made.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Through the transparent region of the skies
Swift as a wish, the missionary flies.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 4.

The Trojan weapon whizz'd along in air,
The Cretan saw, and shunn'd the brazen spear;
Sent from an arm so strong, the missive wood
Sunk deep in earth, and quiver'd where it stood.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

The arrow is a light missile weapon, which in ancient times was used to annoy the enemy at a distance, and particularly when put to flight.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 7.

A saying of a zealot in former times has been reported, that "unarmed missionaries make few converts." Yet were the apostles of our ever blessed Redeemer such missionaries; and they converted the world at a time when the wit and the wisdom, the fashion and the power of it were all in arms against them.—Horne. Works, vol. v. Disc. 19.

MIS-SOUND, v. i. e. to sound, to speak—wrongly.

The Frenchmen knewe well their hardiness, but yet thei called them Krakers, which by missoundyng was commonly called Krakers.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 16.

MIS-SPEAK, v. } i. e. to speak, to say, to MISPEECH. } utter. to tell—wrongly, erroneously, wrongfully, unjustly.

Now bete thy brest, and say to god of love,
Thy grace, lord, for now I me repent
If I mispeake. Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

And therefore of detraction
In loue, that I have mispeake
Telle howe ye will it shal be wroke.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And then, if that I fynde a lacke
Of any worde, that I mispeake,
Whiche was to muche in any wise;
Anone my wittes I despise. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And otherwise of no mispeche
My conscience for to seche,
I cannot of enuie finde,
That I mispeake haue ought behynde,
Wherof loue ought be mispaid. Id. Ib. b. ii.

Then as a mother which delights to heare
Her early childe mis-speake half utter'd words,
Or, because majestie doth never feare
Ill or bold speech, she audience affords.
Donne. Poems, p. 177.

Shall Lewes haue Blaunch, and Blaunch those provinces.
Is it not so—thou hast mispeake, misheard;
Be well aduis'd, tell o'er thy tale againe.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iii. sc. 1.

MIS-STEP, v. i. e. to step, or move the foot,
to go—wrongly, erroneously.

Where so as euer his loue go,
She shall not with hir litell to Missteppe, but he seeth it all. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

MIS-SUCCE'SS, i. e. wrong or ill success, ill luck.

This is, as some shifting alchymist that casts all the fault of his mis-success upon his glasse or his furnace.
Bp. Hall. Sermon at Court, August 8.

MIS-SUGGE'STION, i. e. wrong or ill suggestion, or intimation.

With so much more indignation must we needs think of these cheaters, (for so I construe St. Paul's κρυβταί), that would fain win you from us with mere tricks of missuggestion.—Bp. Hall. A Letter Parænetical.

MIST, v. } Dut. Mist; A. S. Mist, *mist-
MIST, n. } ian*, caligare, to darken.

And anon myist and derkenesse felden down on him.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 13.

And immediately there fell on him a myste & a darcnes.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For I have sene of a full misty morow,
Folowen ful oft a merry somer's day.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

These philosopheres speke so mistily
In this craft, that man cannot come therby,
For any wit that men have now adayes.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16, 862.

What meaneth this, what is this mistiheed.
Id. The Complaint of Mars & Venus.

Thus stant this worlde fulfilled of miste.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Ther was such a myst, that a man coude not se ye length of a spere before him.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 58. p. 79.

And that whiche conserneth theyr dishonour or losse it is ouer subtly excused, or soo darkely or mystly wryten, that the reder therof shall hardly come to ye knowlege of the trouthe.—Fabyan, c. 245.

[The Ministers of the Gospel ought] to endeavour to have their sculs purified from the affections of sin, that the light of the divine truth may shine clear in them, and not be fogged or misted with filthy vapours.
Leighton. Com. Peter, i. 10, 12.

— Lend me a looking-glasse,
If that her breath will mist or staine the stone,
Why then she liues.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act v. sc. 3.

King. I blame you not
For hearing this, I must perforce compound
With mistfull eyes, or they will issue to.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 6.

O my distressed lord, even such our griefs;
Here they're but felt and seen with mistful eyes,
But like to groves, being topp'd, they higher rise.
Id. Pericles, Act i. sc. 4.

For the mistiness scattereth and breaketh suddenly.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 91.

Rom. Not I.
Vnlesse the breath of harticke groanes
Mist-like infold me from the search of eyes.
Shakespeare Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 3
Blind were those eyes, saw not how bright did shine
Through flesh's misty veil those beams divine.
Donne. On Mrs. Boulstred.

The angry billows rear their heads on high,
Dashing aloft the foaming surges fly
And rising, cloud the air with misty spray.
Rowe. To the Earl of Godolphin.

Where there is a giddiness in the head, there will always be a mist before the eyes.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

Dull are slow Ouse's mist-exhaling plains,
Where long, rank grass the morning dew retains:
Who pastures there in autumn's humid reign,
His flock from sickness hopes to save in vain.
Scott. Amœbean Eclogues.

—The sable ensign of the night
Unfurled by mist-impelling Eurus veils
The last red radiance of declining day.
Mason. The English Garden, b. iii.

MIS-TAKE, v. } i. e. to take wrongly, erro-MISTAKE, n. } neously; to take the wrong
MISTAKER. } course, (or as Mr. Tyrwhitt MISTAKING, n. } expresses it,) "the wrong MISTAKEABLE. } part; to transgress."

To take, apprehend, accept, perceive or conceive —wrongly, erroneously; to misapprehend, to misunderstand. To be mistaken has a two-fold application:—

1. I am mistaken,—i. e. taken, apprehended, wrongly, erroneously; I am misapprehended, misunderstood.

2. I am mistaken,—i. e. taken, led, drawn the wrong course or path, astray; I am misled, misguided, betrayed; and, consequentially, I go wrong or astray, I err, I misapprehend.

& if the Scottis kyng mistake in any braide
Of treson in any thyng, ageyn Henry forsaide.
R. Brunne, p. 138.

Ladies I praye ensample taketh,
Ye that ayenst your loue mistaketh;
For if of hir death be you to wite,
God can full well your wile quite.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

And therefore as concerninge myracles, in which your selfe will agree, that I am not (by any mistaking of reason and nature) deceyued.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 128.

For me he did mistake that squire to bee;
For never two so like did living creature see.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

—Would it not anger
A stoick, a coward, yea a martyr,
To see a pursuivant come and call
All his clothes, copes, books, primers, and all
His plate, chalices; and mistake them away,
And ask a fee for coming?
Donne, Sat. 5.

Be sure to be drunke; you'll mis-reckon the better, and be lesse asham'd on't; but your true tricke, rascall, must be,
to be euer busie, and mis-take away the bottles and cannes,
in hast, before they be half drunke off.
B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act ii. sc. 2.

—For either
He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

And 'tis indeed a thing not very strange, to be at the difference of a third part, in so large and collective an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakable numbers.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 1.

Whiles I thus sincerely pleade for truth, the well meaning ignorance of some mistakers hath passed as deepe, as unjust censures upon mee.
Bp. Hall. An Apologeticall Advertisement to the Reader.

Tell me thou shadow of S. Peter, Didst thou take these French Protestants for Malchus, whose eares while thou wouldst have cut off, thy sword by a light mistake glanc't upon their throats?—Id. To Pope Urban.

Let us endeavour to advance the common good, that a pious zeal may not draw in confusion; and that we may not mistakingly rear up the walls of Babel while we intend Jerusalem.—Id. Mystery of Godliness. Epistle prefixed.

It is the ennobling office of the understanding, to correct the fallacious and mistaken reports of sense, and to assure us that the staff in the water is straight, though our eye would tell us it is crooked.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

—So, like the watchful traveller
That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,
Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

They [eclipses] may on divers occasions help to settle chronology, and rectify the mistakes of Historians that writ many ages ago.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Men of cold complexions are very apt to mistake a want of vigour in their imaginations for a delicacy in their judgments.—Young. On Lyric Poetry.

MIS-TEACH, v. A. S. Mis-tæc-an, i. e. to teach, to instruct—wrongly, erroneously.

Because he that had misteach his wife and his children, were vnmete for a great cure.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 229.

And therbi blame the church for misteaching the people, as though the church taught theym to put lesse trust in God & in faith of Christ than they should do.—Id. Ib. p. 263.

Remonst. Multitudes of people they say distaste it [the Liturgy:] more shame for those who have so mistaught them.—Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Defence.

MIS-TEMPER, v. i. e. tempered, ordered, regulated—wrongly; disordered, diseased, disturbed, confused.

"Happy was I," (the old queene said,)
"When as a maide vnweade,
Nor husband's weale nor children's woe Mistempered my head."

Warner. Albion's England, b. vii. c. 24.

He customablie vsed to sit at supper till it were verie late in the night, hauing his banketting dishes and cuppes to come in one after another, till he were so mistempered, that being laid to sleepe, he would straight vomit, &c.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Ferquhard.

MISTERY. } Skinner says,—from Fr. Mes- MISTERYE. } tier; It. Mestiero; the art or business by which any one supports himself. All,
I believe, from the Lat. Mysterium, because every art or craft, however mean, has its own secrets, which it discloses only to the initiated. Lye traces it from the Isl. Meistari, a master; and Thomas Warton is of opinion that "Mystery, antiently used for a particular art or skill in general, is a specious and easy corruption of mastery or mastery, the Eng. of the Lat. Magisterium, or artificium; in Fr. Maistrise, mestier, mestrie; and in It.
Magisterio, with the same sense," (Hist. of English Poetry, vol. iii. p. 37.) Spenser uses the verb:
"It mistreth not;" i. e. it needeth not, there is not need or occasion.

From the mastery or skill in a trade, necessary or needful, it was extended in its application to—
The trade or occupation, art or craft; skill.
And hence in Spenser, "It mistreth not to tell,"
is,—it skilleth not.

Respons thei gaf hem there, "thei were men of mistere."
R. Brunne, p. 169.

But telleth me what mistere man ye ben,
That ben so hardy for to figheten here
Withouten any juge, other offiicere,
As though it were in listes really.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1712.

In youth he lerned hadde a good mistere,
He was a wel good wright, a carpentere.—Id. Ib. v. 615.

He of meat hath no mistere.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Of hem that ben artificers,
Whiche vsen craftes and misters,
Whose arte is cleped mechanike.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The redcrosse knight toward him crossed fast,
To weet what mister wight was so dismay'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

Ne wone what mister maladie it is,
Whereby to seeke some means it to appease.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 12.

As for my name, it mistreth not to tell;
Call me the squire of dames, that me besecmeth well.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 7.

Shame light on him, that through so false abusion
Doth turn the name of souldiers to abusion,
And that, which is the noblest mysterie,
Brings to reproach and common infamy.
Id. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

I bidde thee teach hem, wost thou how?
By some generall signe now,
In what place thou shalt founden be,
If that men had mister of thee.
Id. Ib. v. 6078.

MIS-TERM, v. i. e. termed, named, called—
wrongly, erroneously.

Hence banished, is banisht from the world,
The world's exile is death. Then banished,
Is death mistearmed.—Shakes. Romeo & Jul. Act iii. sc. 3.

MIS-THINK, v. i. e. to think wrongly or erroneously; to have wrong thoughts or ideas or notions.

When they misthinke, they lightly let it passe.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

Had she perseuer'd just, there would have been
Some that would sin, misthinking she did sin.
Donne. Funeral Elegies. On Mrs. Boulstred.

But I with better reason him aviz'd,
And shew'd him, how, through error and misthought
Of our like persons each to be disguiz'd,
Or his exchange or freedom might be wrought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

Thoughts, which how found they harbour in thy brest,
Adam, misthought of her to thee so dear?
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

MIS-THROW, v. i. e. to throw or cast—wrongly,
erroneously.

Tell me therefore if it be so
Hast thou thine eie ought misthrowe?
Gower. Con. A. b. i.

MIS-TIDE, v. } A. S. Mis-tidan, i. e. to tide, MISTIDING, n. } to come to pass, to chance or happen—wrongly, unfortunately.

He that hath over hard an herte, atte laste he shal mis-happe and mistide.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Nowe it is no doubt than, that these wayes ne ben a maner mistidinges to blisfulnes: [ad beatitudinem viam devia quædam sint.]—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

MISTION. Fr. Mistion, mixture. See Mix.

Unless his [Aristotle] opinion be admitted, there would be no true and perfect mistion, but only aggregates or heaps of contiguous corpuscles.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 504.

MISTLETO'E, or } Junius writes it also MISSLETO'E. } Misselden, and Skinner—Misseldine; the latter, with Wachter, derives Mistel from Ger. Mist, (A. S. Mixen,) dung; (see the quotation from Pliny;) and ta, or toe, that part of the foot by which the bird is caught with the viscus or bird lime.

Moreover, set or sow this missello which way soever you will, it will never take and grow: it commeth onely by the mewing of birds, especially of the stockdove or quoit, and the blackbird, which feed thereupon, and let it passe through their bodie. And this is the nature of it, unless it bee mortified, altered and digested in the stomacke and belly of birds it will never grow.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 44.

The fearless British priests under an aged oak Taking a milk white bull unstained with the yoke,
And with an ax of gold, from that Jove-sacred tree
The mistleto cut down.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

That viscus arboreus or mistletoe is bred upon trees from seeds which birds, especially thrushes and ring-doves, let fall thereon, was the creed of the ancients, and is still believed among us; is the account of its production, set down by Pliny, delivered by Virgil, and subscribed by many more.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 6.

There, where the spreading consecrated boughs,
Fed the sage mistleto, the holy Druids
Lay rapt in moral musings.
Mason. Elfrida.

MIS-TRAIN, v. i. e. to train, draw, or lead—
wrongly, erroneously.

Hoping thereby to have my love obtayned:
Yet can I not my love have nathë more;
For she by force is still fro me detayned,
And with corruptfull bribes is to untruth mystrayned.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

MIS-TRANSLATE, v. i. e. to translate, bear, or convey, (the meaning,)—wrongly; to interpret
wrongly, erroneously.

It is more infidelitie to doe as Tyndall hath done, purposely mysse-trāslate Christes holye gospell, to set furth heresies as euell as the Alchorane.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 340.

There is an holy and decent modesty in all those which are worthy to serve at the altar, which teacheth them to give God his due times, with respect even of outward purity; which is all that Eusebius, by them misse-translated, and miss-alleged by him, requireth.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 25.

MIS-TRANSPORTED, i. e. transported, carried, borne across, or away, (from one's self, or self-government,)—wrongly, erroneously.

And can ye then with patience think that any ingenuous christian should be so farre mis-transported as to condemn a good prayer because as it is in his heart, so it is in his book too.—Bp. Hall. An Humble Remonstrance.

MIS-TREADINGS. Dut. Mis-treden; i. e. treadings, goings—wrong; misgoings.

But thou do'st in thy passages of life,
Make me believe, that thou art onely mark'd
For the hot vengeance, and rod of heauen
To punish my mistreadings.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 2.

MISTRESS, v. } Anciently written Mais-
MISTRESS, n. } tress. See MASTER.
MISTRESS-SHIP. }

As if their day were only to be spent
In dressing, mistressing, and compliment.
Donne. To Mr. Tilman.

Wonder not, sovran mistress, if perhaps Thou canst, who art sole wonder, much less arm
Thy looks, the heav'n of mildnes, with disdain, Displeas'd that I approach thee thus, and gaze Insatiate.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

I know, this quest of yours, and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant
To the great mistress of yon princely shrine, Whom with low reverence I adore as mine.—Id. Arcades.

If any of them shall usurp a mistress-ship over the rest, or make herself a queen over them, and make them subjects and slaves to her; or a mother-hood to the rest, otherwise than in a priority and aid of conversation, and make them but daughters and punies to her: she shall be guilty of high arrogance and presumption against Christ and his dear spouse the church.—Bp. Hall. Resolutions for Religion.

MIS-TROWINGS. Dut. Mis-trowen; to misthink, to think amiss of; to suspect.

For espyall and mistrowynges
Thei did than suche thynges,
That euery man might other know.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

MIS-TRUST, v. } i. e. to trust, to trow, MISTRU'ST, n. } to think—wrong or ill of;
MISTRU'STER. } to think or believe to be MISTRU'STFUL. } unworthy of trust, confi-MISTRU'STFULLY. } dence, or credit, or not MISTRU'STFULNESS. } be trusted; to doubt or MISTRU'STLESS. } fear the truth; to diffide in, to discredit.

For though a man be falle in jalous rage
Let maken with this water his potage,
And never shal he more his wif mistrust.
Chaucer. The Pardoner's Tale, v. 12,333.

For ever some mistrust, or nice strife,
There is in love, some cloud over the sunne.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. ii.

Myne ease is bullded all on trust;
And yet mistrust breeds myne anoye.
Gascoigne. A straunge Passion of a Louer.

You infidelles and mistrusters of God, what will you make of God? Will you make him a fleshely and a carnall stocke, full of passions and of affections.—Barnes. Workes, p. 354.

What wisdom wer it nowe therein to shewe our selfe so mistrustful and wauerig.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 247.

And since thou dooest so muche require, thou shalt haue geuen vnto thee, that shall bothe be a true token of the promisse in tyme commyng to be perfourmed, and also a punishement for thy mistrustfulness at this present de-

Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoynes,
That I should mind thee oft, and mind thou me.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

When he who most excells in fact of arms,
In what he counsels and in what excels
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Mistrustfully he trusteth, and
He dreadingly did dare,
And fortie passions in a trice
In him consort and square.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vi. c. 33.

Vnfriendly did exclude his friend
From out his city strong,
Whilst with his Greekes he hunts abroad,
Mistrustless of such wrong.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 4.

Near thee, mistrust not, constant I'll abide,
And fall or vanquish, fighting by thy side.
Prior. Henry & Emma.

This must seem to savour of infidelity, and a contempt or mistrust of God's fundamental promise.
Stillfleet, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

Next stood Mistrust with frequent sigh,
Disorder'd look and squinting eye;
While meager Envy claim'd a place,
And Jealousy with jaundic'd face.
Cotton. Happiness, Vision 5.

—Th' unduteous boy
Drunk with delusive hopes of worldly joy,
And still mistrustful of his sire's control,
Checks every thought of duty in his soul.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. vi.

These evils sprung, the most important health,
That of the mind, destroy.
Armstrong. The Art of Preserving Health.

MIS-TURN, v. i. e. to turn wrongly; to pervert.

Ther been summe that troublen ghoul, and wolen mys- turne [invertre] the euangelie of Crist.—Wiclif. Gal. c. 1.

Through misturning of her chaunce.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And whan this littel worlde mistourneth,
The great worlde all ouertorneth.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.
Whereas the law is reasonable
The common people stant menable.
And if the lawe torne a mis,
The people also mistourned is. Id. Ib. b. vii.

MIS-TU'TORED, i. e. tutored, guided, directed, instructed—wrongly; having bad tutors or instructors.

Mine own George Onslow, oft reflect that more
From thee the world expects, than from the swarm
Of gay, mistutored youths, who ne'er the charm
Of Virtue hear, nor wait at Wisdom's door.
Edwards, Son. 28. To George Onslow, Esq.

MIS-VALUE, v. i. e. to value or esteem
wrongly, erroneously.

Now, sifeer [Wernock] thou hast split the marke
Albe that I ne wot I han mis-song:
But, for I am so yong, I dread my warke
Wol be misvalued both of old and yong.
Browne. Ecl. Young Willie & Old Wernock.

MIS-UNDERSTAND, v. } i. e. to under- MISUNDERSTA'NDER. } stand, (sub-stare, MISUNDERSTA'NDING, n. } subsistere, sustinere, suscipere, supponere,) or stand under, to uphold the weight or burden: (met.) to hold, contain, or comprehend—wrongly, erroneously;
to mistake, to misapprehend, to misconceive.

So that yt siwede the wymmen, when me ogt mysvnderstod.
R. Gloucester, p. 42.

May it not also bee, quoth I, that some of them which do rede it diligently, and diligently compare and consider euerye text, how it may stande with other, may yet for al that, mistake & misvnderstand it? D. Yes, quod he, it may be so.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 147.

But diuers and many texts as farre semed vnto the miss- understanders to speake agaiſt purgatory.—Id. Ib. p. 324.

You see how clearly I have endeavoured to explicate this harmlesse position; yet I perceiue some tough misunder- standings will not be satisfied.
Bp. Hall. To the Lord Bishop of Salisbury.

Sometimes the misunderstanding of a word has scattered and destroy'd those who have been in possession of victory, and wholly turned the fortune of the day.—South, vol. i. Ser. 8.

But such is her belief in your just candour
She hopes you will not so misunderstand her,
To wrest her harmless meaning to the sense
Of silly emulation or offence.
Butler. To Edward Howard, Esq.

The second way by which he [the hypocrite] raises the same false hope is by his misunderstanding of sin.
South, vol. x. Ser. 2.

There is one part however of these papers, in which I conceive I have been misunderstood as having carried my attack against the moral doctrines of Socrates, and of this I

Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine.—Milton. Comus.

Vpon whose dead corpses there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shamelesse transformation,
By those Welsh women done, as may not be (Without much shame) retold or spoken of.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

For Palinode (if thou him ken)
Yode late on pilgrimage
To Rome, (if such be Rome,) and then
He sawe thilke misusage.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. July.

How much names taken for things are apt to mislead the understanding, the attentive reading of philosophical writers would abundantly discover; and that, perhaps, in words little suspected for any such misuse.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 10. s. 15.

He fell from good, misusing his free will,
Into this world, this life of good and ill.
Byrom. Life & Death.

How cometh it then that the Pope for so many hundred thousands that miscary, will neither breake the ordinance or mitigat it.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 316.

But on ye tother side, what harme would come of hys *mytigation*s, and what increase of heretikes, the whole summe and sequele of hys deuises doe more than manifestly shew.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 924.

And dieted with fasting every day,
The swelling of his woundes to mitigate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

By sundry artificiall deuices and terrours, to extort from them great fines and ransomes, which they termed compositions and mitigations.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 209.

By the practices of holy men he also shewed, that the rigour of that ceremonious law was mitigable; that in some cases its obligation might be relaxed, and its observance dispensed with.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

Most men in some seasons are incapable of reproof; so are men in calamity, who are discomposed by grief, the which is rather to be mitigated by comfort than increased and exasperated by blame.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 21.

But, as his years increase, his fires assuage,
Alloy with time and mitigate with age.

Brookes. Jerusalem Delivered, b. i.

These crimes successive, on your trial,
Have met with proofs beyond denial;
To which yourself, with shame, conceded,
And but in mitigation pleaded.

E. Moore. The Trial of Selem.

MITRE. } Fr. Mitre; Lat. It. and Sp.
MITRAL. } Mitra; Gr. Μίτρα, from the ancient MITRED. } μειν, ligare, to bind, (Vossius.)

With mitred hats, with oynted bush and beard,
His rape enioyeth. Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

And even diadems themselves were but fasciations, and handsome ligatures, about the heads of princes; nor wholly omitted in the mitrall crown, which common picture seems to set too upright and forward upon the head of Aaron.

Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

Neither doth that mitred moderator of the world affect any other embleme than that which Julian jestingly ascribes to Julius Cæsar, το πρωτενειν, "to rule all;" or to Alexander the Great, παρτα νικην, "to conquer all."

Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome.

Your first assay was on your native laws;
Those having torn with ease and trampled down,
Your fangs you fasten'd on the mitred crown,
And freed from God and monarchy your own.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

With solemn steps and slow,
High potentates and dames of royal birth,
And mitred fathers in long order go:
Great Edward, with the lilies on his brow.

Gray. Ode for Music.

MITTENS. Fr. Mitaines, Junius derives from mitan, middle, because they are chirotheca veluti dimidiata, leaving the fingers unconfined. Skinner, — q. Eremitana, as if peculiarly used by hermits. Menage,—from mit, a cat, because made of cat's skin.

MOAT, v. } Minshew and Somner (see Lye) MOAT, n. } derive from the Fr. Moite, moist, wet. But see Mota, in Du Cange. The word is applied to—

A ditch or trench containing water, of such width and depth, as to be a defence.

It is an over rigorous construction of the workes of God, that in moating our island with the Ocean hee meant to shut us up from other regions.—Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis? s. 1.

— This little world,

This precious stone, set in the siluer sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moate defensive to a house,
Against the enuy of lesse happier lands.

MO'BILE, n. } movibilis,) that can or may be MOB'LITY. } moved. "The mobil people" is MO'BISH. } an expression as old as Chaucer;

the movable, unsteady, inconstant people; mobile was then used alone, (sub. people,) and subsequently contracted into mob. Dryden uses both mobile and mob, the latter as if not long introduced; the former (in the stage directions) as the common word.

Mob,—the movable people or populace; the crowd, the multitude.

Mobile,—that can or may be moved; movable.

The vnder hydde malice and rancoure of purposinge enuie fornecast and ymagined, in distruction of mobil people,

Thou mortall Tyme euery man can tell,
Art nothyng else but the mobilite,
Of sonne and mone chaungyng in euery degre.

Sir T. More. Workes. Verses written in his Youth.

Whose ingenuity hath been so bold not only to proceed below the account of minutes, but to attempt perpetuall motions, and engines whose revolutions (could their substance answer the design) might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 19.

So, long experience has found it true of the unthinking mobile, that the closer they shut their eyes the wider they open their hands.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

Which exciting the mobile headed by Tomaso Anello, commonly called Masaniello, a fisherman, all things in Naples were for some time turned topsy turvy.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii. p. 384.

The Epicureans suppose this world to be produced by the casual concourse of atoms, and ascribe to every particular atom an innate and unloseable mobility, or, rather, an actual motion, or a restless endeavour after it.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 445.

Muf. (Making up to the mobile.) Good people, here you are met together.—Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iv. sc. 1.

This is all address'd to you, sir: she singled you out with her eye, as commander-in-chief of the mobility.—Id. Ib.

To gratifie the barbarous party of my audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mobb (as they call them) are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same character of baseness and cowardice which are here described.—Id. Cleomenes, Pref.

He shrunk from the dangers that threatened him, and sacrificed his conscience and his duty to the menaces of a mob.

Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 22.

If these commonwealths, formerly so warlike and ambitious, maintain'd each of them a small city guard, to prevent mobbish disorders, it is all they had occasion for.

Hume, pt. ii. Ess. 11.

MOB, v. } Ray says,—that to mob is to MOB, n. } dress carelessly. Mabs are slat-MO'BLED. } terns. (See the Commentators on Shakespeare, and Mr. Nares, who produce other instances of mobled.) Our lexicographers do not notice the word: it appears to have had the same origin with the preceding, and to have been applied to an article of dress for the head—thrown on or thrown off—as convenience required it to be worn or laid aside: moved or removed.

Swarms of men that went gossiping up and down, telling odd stories to the people, as old wives and nurses do to children, having most of them chins as smooth as women's, and their faces mob'd in hoods and long coats like petticoats.

And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flowrie arbors, yonder allies green,
Or walk at noon with branches overgrown,
That mock our scant manuring.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. iv.

And otherwhiles with bitter mockes and mowes,
He would him scorne, that to his gentyl mynd
Was much more grievous than the other's blowes.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

But, soone as they this mock-king did espy,
Their troublous strife they stinted by and by,
Thinking indeed that it the lyon was.

Id. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

— Those that are good manners at the Court, are as ridiculous in the Countrey, as the behaviour of the Countrie is most mockable at the Court.

Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act ii. sc. 1.

The forlorne maiden, whom your eyes have seene
The laughing stocke of Fortune's mockeries,
Am th' onely daughter of a king and queene.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act i. sc. 1.

"Let's meete," quoth Eccho mockingly:
Which, hearing, he with speed, (Beleeuing that his shadow was A nymph, and spake in deed,)
Did leap into the fountaine.

Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 45.

Philip, the brother of Aminander's wife, was taken by the consul; made a mocking-stock; and sent away prisoner to Rome.—Ralegh. History of the World, b. v. c. 5. s. 7.

Let them have a care how they intrude upon so great and holy an ordinance, in which God is so seldom mocked, but it is to the mockers confusion.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

'Twas then that Peter, standing up to show
Th' absurd reproach, gave all of them to know
That, what these mockers call'd a drunken fit,
Was God's performance of what Joel writ.

Byrom. Remarks on Dr. Middleton's Examination.

And many a fane he reard, that still sublime
In massy pomp has mock'd the stealth of time.

Warton. On His Majesty's Birth-day, June 4, 1788.

Mockery and ridicule, when exercised upon the scriptures, or even upon the places, persons, and forms set apart for the administration of religion, fall within the mischief of the law which forbids the profanation of God's name.

MODA'LITY. } Perhaps mag-od, mau-od, maud, MO'DISH. } or mod, from A. S. and Goth.
Mag-an, to may. (See COMMODOUS.) It is applied in English as the Fr.—

Mode, — "Manner, sort, fashion, guise, use, custom, way, means," (Cotgrave.)

The mode, is the fashion; the style of fashion.
It is also used in music, see the quotation from Sir W. Jones; in logic, see the quotation from Wilson; and in metaphysics, see the quotation from Locke.

Tindall would be fayne wit in what figure it is made: he shal finde in the first figure and in the third mode.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 504.

A moode is a lawful placing of propositions, in their dewe qualitie or quantitie.—Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 26.

For all my reigne hath beene but a scene
Acting that argument. And now my death
Changes the moode.—Shakes. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 4.

Our Saviour lifting up his eyes beheld
An ample space under the broadest shade,
A table richly spread, in regal mode.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

If they finde a determinate intellection of any modes of being, which were never in the least hinted by their external or internal senses; I'll believe that such can realize chimeras.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it but only a modal diversity.—Id. Ib.

It is to be considered there is a double consent to a proposition, the one is direct, the other reflex; the first is directly terminated upon the honesty or dishonesty of the object, the other upon the manner of it, and modality.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

Modes I call such complex ideas, which, however compounded, contain not in them the supposition of subsisting by themselves, but are considered as dependencies on, or affections of substances.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 12. s. 4.

O what a midnight curse has he, whose side
Is pester'd with a mood and figure bride!
Let mine, ye gods, (if such must be my fate,)
No logic learn, nor history translate.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

Modal [necessity or self-sufficiency] is posterior, and subsequent, in order of nature and conception, to the existence or existent subject, whereof it is the mode, and to which it is referred up as to its source or center, its substratum or support.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 432.

No wonder therefore, if these men, discoursing of the nature and substance of God, in a language neither warrantable nor apprehensible, have by their modalities, suppositivities, circuminceptions, and twenty such other chimeras, so misrepresented this adorable article of the Trinity to men's reason, as to bring them first to loath, and at length to deny it.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

Rail on, ye triflers, who to Will's repair
For new lampoons, fresh cant, or modish air.
Smith. To the Memory of Mr. John Philips.

Our grandames' modes long absent from our eyes,
At your all powerful bidding duteous rise.
Warton. Fashion.

These are the several modes in which we may weaken or even destroy the moral and religious principles of every sincere christian, or, in the words of scripture, may make our brother to offend.—Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 16.

A series of sounds relating to one leading note is called a mode, or a tone, and as there are twelve semitones in the scale, each of which may be made in its turn the leader of a mode, it follows that there are twelve modes; and each of them has a peculiar character, arising from the position of the modal note.—Jones. Essay on the Imitative Arts.

Hence the tonsile box
Wove, in mosaic mode of many a curi,
Around the figur'd carpet of the lawn.
Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

Our language has made but small progress, compared either with the Greek or with the Latin (or some other languages) even in this modal and temporal abbreviation.
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. ii. c. 7.

That which has, which represents or resembles, the mode or manner, fashion or form of any other thing; the copy, the image, the representation.

In cartes, in mappes, and eke in models made.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Hollande, 1572.

O would I could my father's cunning use!
And souls into well-modul'd clay infuse.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. i. p. 4.

When thy affliction serv'd me for a book
Whereby to model Egypt's misery.
Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b. ii.

They proposed, first, to have the army settled and modelled in a way of unity before they determined upon the government.—Baker. Charles II. an. 1659.

Some limb or model dragg'd out of the ruinous mass,
The richness will declare in glory whilst it was.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. i.

Now while my friend, just ready to depart,
Was packing all his goods in one poor cart;
He stopp'd a little at the conduit-gate,
Where Numa model'd once a Roman State.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

One thing receives another not according to the full latitude of the object, but according to the scanty model of its own capacity.—South, vol. x. Ser. 2.

But he [Lilbourne] being naturally a great trouble-world in all the variety of government became a hodge-podge of religion, the chief ring-leader of the levellers, a great proposal-maker, and modeller of state, and publisher of several seditious pamphlets.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

He [God] moulded or modelled him [man] as a potter doth; we see the work, as it were upon the wheel, rising and growing under the hands of the divine artificer!
Horne. Works, vol. iv. Dis. 1.

Mine herte for thee is disconsolate,
My pains also nothing me moderate.
Chaucer. The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

The chief blisse that in earth to living man is lent,
Is moderat welth, to nourish life, yf he can be content.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 5.

I say as I said before it may peradventure in some things doe wel to cōsider the causes of Gods commandmēt so it be done moderately and with reverence.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 361.

Moderation in the lymttes and boundes, whiche honestie hath appoynted in speaking and doynge: like as in renynge, passyng the gole is accounted but rashnesse, so renynge halfe way is reproved for slownesse.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 20.

Gladly the two dukes of Berrey and Burgoyne wolde haue modered that voyage, but they might nat be herde.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 187.

These tydynges somewhat modered dyuers mennes hartes, so that they were nere at the poynte to haue broken their voyage.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. c. 187.

Such musicke is wise words with time concented,
To moderate stiffe mindes dispos'd to strive.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and beseeching share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous even proportion.
Milton. Comus.

But the milde ayre with season moderate
Gently attempt'd, and disposed so well,
That still it breathed forth sweet spirit and holesom smell.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

What goodnesse can there be in the world without moderation, whether in the use of God's creatures, or in our own disposition and carriage? Without this, justice is no other than cruell rigour; mercy, unjust remission; pleasure, brutish sensuality; love, frenzy; anger, fury; sorrow, desperate mopingness; joy, distempered wildnesse; knowledge, saucy curiosity; piety, superstition; care, wracking distraction; courage, mad rashness.
Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, s. 1.

But let Moses be the moderator and judge of this dispute, who teacheth us directly, that these cities are not seated in so divers and distant regions.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 10. s. 2.

Yet when his profit moderated,
The fury of his heart abated.
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flow'rs Revive and raise themselves with moderate showers,
But overcharged with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist, and bend their heads again.
Waller. Instructions to a Painter.

And what is all virtue but a moderation of excesses? A mean that keeps the balance of the soul even, neither suffering it to rise too high on one side, nor to fall too low on the other.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

For my part I shall always be more fond of promoting moderation than zeal; though perhaps the surest way of producing moderation in every party is to increase our zeal for the public.—Hume, pt. i. Ess. 3.

Now living or being, not long ago, lately, recently: opposed to—ancient. Also to—rare, uncommon:—and thus (Steevens) trite, ordinary, common. See the quotations from Shakespeare.

Yet was much taxed by that age precise,
For faults which modern times not strange have thought.
Stirling. Domes-day. The Sixth Hour.

Oh that my tongue were in the thunders voice
Then with a passion would I shake the world,
And rouse from sleepe that fell Anatomy
Which cannot heare a ladies feeble voyce,
Which scornes a moderne invocation.
Shakespeare. King John, Act iii. sc. 4.

— Say, (good Cæsar,)
That I some lady trifles haue reseru'd,
Immoment toys, things of such dignitie
As we great moderne friends withall.
Id. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act v. sc. 2.

And, martyrs, you who bravely march'd before,
Whil'st match'd with moderns do not wrath conceive;
When press'd by Pagans Idols to adore,
You chus'd to dye, ere quite your Lord to leave;
These suffred have as much, and aym'd at more.
Stirling. Domes-day. The Tenth Hour.

And as he thus rekons that repentance will secure him, so he doubts not but he can command that when he will; as, according to the doctrine of Pelagius and his modern admirers, he certainly may.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

Aristotle observing Bacon advance with a furious mein, drew his bow to the head, and let fly his arrow, which missed the valiant modern, and went hissing over his head.
Swift. The Battle of the Books.

Scriblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms.—Id. Ib.

The base detracting world would not then have dared to report, that something is amiss, that his brain had undergone an unlucky shake; which even his brother modernists themselves, like ungrates, do whisper so loud, that it reaches up to the very garret I am now writing in.—Id. Tale of a Tub, s. 9.

What if we take a year, a month, a day,
From this judicious sum of fame away,
Shall he among the ancients rise to fame,
Or sink with moderns to contempt and shame.
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

The Macaronian is a kind of burlesque poetry, consisting of a jumble of words of different languages, with words of the vulgar tongue Latinized, and Latin words modernized.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. ii.

To warne the wise, that they such faults do flie
As put downe peace by couine or debate.
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

The farther I looke backe into those former tymes of Tyndall, Frith, and others lyke, more simplicitie, wyth true zeale, and humble modestie, I see with lesse corruption of affections in them.—John Foxe. Pref. to Tyndall's Workes.

Modestie: which worde not being known in the Englyshe tongue, ne of all them whiche vnderstonde Latine, excepte they had red good auctours, they improperly named this vertue dyscrecion.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 25.

And, that augmented all her other prayse,
She modest was in all her deedes and words,
And wondrous chaste of life, yet lov'd of knights and lords.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

I loue Benedicke well, and I could wish he would modestly examine himselfe to see how much he is vnworthy to haue so good a lady.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act ii. sc. 3.

But her sad eyes, still fast'n'd on the ground,
Are governed with goodly modesty,
That suffers not one look to glaunce awry,
Which may let in a little thought unsound.
Spenser. Epithalamion.

Modesty is a kind of shame or bashfulness, proceeding from the sense a man has of his own defects compared with the perfections of him whom he comes before.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

There is a degree of pain in modest diffidence; but it is amply recompensed by the glow of satisfaction, derived from the favourable opinion of others, and by the encouragement thus inspired, that the deficiency is not so great as was apprehended, or too great to be surmounted.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Dis. 1. c. 1.

MOD

She indirectly and modestly suggests, that were Christ to make it his request to God that Lazarus might revive, Christ's request would be granted.

Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

True modesty proceeds from a just discernment of propriety, and is frequently connected with exalted ideas of genuine merit.—Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Dis. 1. c. 4.

The xvi. statute doth me great greuance,
But ye must that releasse or modifie.

Chaucer. The Court of Love.

A kinge after the reule is holde
To modifie, and to adresse
His yestes vpon suche largesse,
That he measure nought excede.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdomes of the Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever, not only to the modified eternity of his mediatorship, so long as there shall be need of regal power to subdue the enemies of God's elect; but also to the complete eternity of the duration of his humanity, which for the future is coeternal to his divinity.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 6.

The use hereof, [of sense,] being only to minister to the modification of life in the vital principle, wherein the essence of sense doth consist.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 3.

Motion, so modified, is appointed to be the cause of our having them [ideas of visible objects.]

Locke. Examination of Malebranche.

How we see it [an image made on the retina] is, I confess, what I understand not; only it appears to me more difficult to conceive a distinct visible image in the uniform unvariable essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter: but the manner how I see either, still escapes my comprehension.—Id. Ib.

We may observe, that the Spirit of Truth itself, where numbers and measures are concerned, in times, places, and persons, useth the aforesaid modificatives, [almost and very high].—Fuller. Worthies. England, vol. i. c. 21.

If it [the soul] be neither matter, nor any modification of matter, then (though you are pleased to affirm somewhat rashly, and without offering any reason for your affirmation) that such reasoning is far from being self-evident, yet it is really as notoriously self-evident as any thing in nature, that it cannot possibly depend upon matter, as to its being and preservation.—Clarke. Letter to Mr. Dodswell.

How much more natural, therefore, is it, that a limited Deity, who at first is supposed only the immediate author of the particular goods and ills in life, should in the end be represented as sovereign maker and modifier of the universe.
Hume. The Natural History of Religion, s. 7.

MODULATOR. }
MODULE, v. }
 To measure, to regulate the measure or proportion, the harmony, the concord.

— That charmer of the night

That moduleth her tunes so admirably rare,
As man to set in parts at first had learn'd of her.
Drayton. Poly-Olbiion, s. 13.

In all vocal musick [the tongue] helpeth the windpipe to modulate the sounds.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 5. s. 16.

The rings of the wind-pipe are fitted for the modulation of the voice.—Id. Ib. s. 10.

The master's hand, in modulated air,
Bids the loud organ breathe.—Somerville. The Chase, b. iii.

For the various modulations of the voice, the upper end of the wind-pipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles, to contract or dilate it as we would have our voice flat or sharp.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

What an abridgment of art, what a variety of uses hath nature laid upon that one member, the tongue, the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge, the centinel, the watchman of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, the necessary servant of mastication, swallowing, sucking, and a great deal besides!

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 5.

The poets of Elizabeth had attained an art of modulation which was afterwards neglected and forgotten.

Johnson. Life of Waller.

— May the nightly pow'r,
Which whispers on my slumbers, cease to breathe
Her modulating impulse through my soul.

Thompson. Sickness, b. v.

MOI

MOIETY. Fr. Moitié, from moyen, moien, the mean or middle; dimidia pars, the half part; but it was used for any part or division. See the commentators on Shakespeare.

They were faire ladies till they fondly striv'd
With the Heliconian maides for maystery;
Of whom they over-comen were depriv'd
Of their proud beautie, and the one moyity,
Transform'd to fish for their bold surquedry.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

The love I dedicate to your lordship is without end;

For in themselves eternall moisture they imply.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 6.

It pleased God to open the windowes of heaven for the moistning and nourishing of their seedes.
Hakewill. Apologie, b. i. c. 5. s. 3.

Her moistful temples bound, with wreaths of quivering reeds.—Drayton. Poly-Olbiion, s. 18.

Some cloudes giue snow, that lights and lies
A moisture moystles: so Doe those that say, alas, God helpe,
And nothing els bestoe.
Warner. Albion's England, b. viii. c. 29.

You know the king is a good husband, and but a steward in effect for the publike, and what comes from you is but a moisture drawne from the earth, which gathers into a cloud, and falls backe vpon the earth againe.
Bacon. King Hen. VII. p. 60.

For moistie blasts not half so mirthfull bee,
As sweet Aurora brings in spring-time faire
Our joyes they dimme, as winter damps the aire.
Mirrour for Magistrates, Induction.

Why were the moist in number so outdone
That to a thousand dry, they are but one?
Blackmore. Creation, b. i.

There shall we find, that when the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man;
One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moistning blood.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

Did not the vapours, by the solar heat
Thinn'd and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat,
Or not in wat'ry clouds collected fly,
Then, form'd to pond'rous drops, desert the sky;
The fields would no recruits of moisture find.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

MO'LAR. Lat. Molares, (sc.) dentes; Fr. Les dents molares.
The cheek teeth or grinders.

The teeth are, in men, of three kinds: sharp, as the fore-teeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed-teeth, or canine, which are between both.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 752.

How necessary these are for man's sustenance, is proved by the painful experience of such aged persons, who wanting their molare teeth must make use of their gums for grinders.
Fuller. Worthies. Cheshire.

MOL

MOLA'SSES. Fr. Mallece; It. Melazzo; and this—a melle, from honey, which it resembles much in sweetness and consistency. (Skinner.) The Low Lat. Mellatium is applied to must, boiled down to half. Cotgrave calls melasses—

The dregs or coarsest of sugar; and Boyle—black, coarse sugar.

The raw flesh of goats, capons, and the like, together with rice and molasses (or black coarse sugar) they put into a quantity of water, and distil it in an alembic till the liquor be stronger than brandy.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 108.

Or, planter, if the coction they prolong Beyond its stated time; the viscous wave
Will in huge flinty masses crystalize,
Which forceful fingers scarce can crumble down;
And which with its melasses ne'er will part.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. iii.

MOLE. Lat. Mola, (sc. salsa), the salted cake used in sacrifices.

She with the mole all in her handes devout Stode neare the aulter.—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Crumble the sacred mole of salt and corn,
Next in the fire the bags with brimstone burn.
Dryden. Virgil, Past. 8.

MOLE, n. A. S. Mal, mael; Ger. Mael, mackl; Lat. Macula, a spot. Applied to—
A spot upon the skin.

Full of pocky moles.—Skelton. Why come ye not to Court.

Whom whylest she did with warie eyene behold,
Upon the litle brest, like christall bright,
She mote perceive a litle purple mold,
That like a rose her silken leaves did faire unfold.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 12.

A common fashion it is to nourish hair upon the mouls of the face, which is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom; and though innocently practised among us, may have a superstitious original.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

'Twas not from them the bard their likeness stole,
The random pencil haply hit the mole;
Ev'n from their prying foes such specks retreat.
Whitehead. On Ridicule.

MOLE. } Fr. Mole; It. Molo; Sp. Muelle; Mo'LECULE. } Lat. Moles; a mass.
A mass, (sc.) of earth or other substance raised as a dam or bank; a mound.

While to their barks his faithful band descends,
Cæsar the mole's contracted space defends.
Rowe. Lucan, b. x.

For instance, I could never see the difference between the antiquated system of atoms and Buffon's organic molecules.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

MOLE. } Dut. Mol-er, mol-warp;

Kilian and Wachter agree with Skinner and Doct. Th. H. that this animal is so called because it throws up the earth. A. S. Molde, mould or earth, and Weorþ-an; Ger. Werff-en; Dut. Worp-en, to throw.

Thus can I kill the moule, which else would ouerthrowe,
The good foundation of thy fame, with every little blowe.
Gascoigne. Councell to Douglass Diue.

The kight cā kill the mouldwarpe, in pleasant meads that breeds.—Id. Id.

That moles are blind and have no eyes, though a common opinion, is received with much variety; some affirming only they have no sight.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 18.

In which like moldwarps nousling still they lurke,
Unmindfull of chiefe parts of manlinesse.
Spenser. Astrophel.

The glass, through which an envious eye doth gaze,
Can eas'ly make a mole-hill mountain seem.
P. Fletcher. Upon his Brother's Book, Christ's Victory.

The brooke is ready to o'reflow the brim,
Or in the bancke the water having got
Some mole-hole, runs, where he expected not.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole
In winding mazes works her hidden hole.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

As bees from hive, from mole-hills ants;
So swarm the females and gallants,
All crowding to the comedy,
For to be seen, and not to see.—King. The Art of Love.

A man who sees with Saxon eyes sees a Saxon building on every molehill.—Walpole. Anecd. of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

MOL

MOLE/ST, v. } Fr. Molester; It. Molestare; MOLESTA'TION. } Sp. Molestar; Lat. Molestus, MOLE/STER. } burdensome, cumbersome,
MOLE/STFUL. } troublesome; from moles, a mass or bulk; consequentially, a great, a difficult work.

To encumber or burden, to trouble, to annoy, to disturb.

But how this case doth Troilus molest,
This may none yearly mannes tongue say.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

But certes in thys maner he ne gettethe him no suffaunce, that power forleteth and that molestie priketh.
Id. Boecius, b. iii.

We have no nede to dout werr ne molestatioune.
The Merchantes Second Tale. Imputed to Chaucer.

Henceforth in safe assurance may we rest,
Having both found a new friend you to aid,
And lost an old foe that did you molest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

So without any molestation he [Hannibal] came to the bank of Rhodanus.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. v. c. 2. s. 2.

Surely to every good and peaceable man, it must in nature needs be a hateful thing to be the displeaser and molester of thousands.—Milton. Reason of Church Govern. b. ii. Pref.

The vilest thistle that infests the plain,
Will think his tawdry painted pride
Deserves the crown; and, if deny'd,
Perhaps with traitor-plots molest your reign.
Hughes. The Birth of the Rose.

But that [Pride] which breaketh out to the disturbance and vexation of others, is hated, as molestfull and mischievous.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 22.

The knight and his companion having reached the castle, now passed the bridge, and entered the gate without molestation.—Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xiv. Note 8.

MOLIMINOUS. From the Lat. Molimen; from moles, a mass or bulk.

Massive, weighty.

Prophecies of so vast and moliminous concernment to the world.—More. Mysteries of Godliness.

MO'LLIFY, v. } Fr. Mollifier; It. Mollifi- MO'LLIFICA'TION. } care; Sp. Molificar; Lat.
MO'LLIFIER. } Mollire, to soften, from mollis, MO'LLIFYING, n. } soft. See EMOLLIENT.

To soften, to soothe, to make or cause to be gentle or tranquil, pliant or supple; to relax, to melt.

Yet forgate I to maken rehersaile
Of waters corosif, and of limaile,
And of bodies mollification,
And also of hir induration.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 13,322.

And the hart here beginneth to mollifie & waxe soft, & to receaue health, and beleueth the mercy of God.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 330.

The erle of Flaunders molefyed the mater as moche as he might.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 424.

And Dūs saith, that there is a mollifieng, that preceedeth grace, which hee calleth attrition.—Barnes. Workes, p. 274.

That can with melting pleasaunce mollifye
Their hardned hearts enur'd to bloud and cruelty.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

For it [orris root] is a great mollifier.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 863.

For induration, or mollification; it is to be enquired what will make metals harder and harder, and what will make them softer and softer.—Id. Physiological Remains.

Induration is a degree towards fixation, and mollification towards volatility.—Id. Id.

Some mollification for your giant, sweet ladie.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 5.

All things tending to the preservation of his life and health, or to the mollifying of his cares, he [a king religious and zealous in God's cause] procureth.
Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. v. c. 2. s. 3.

Chiron mollify'd his cruel mind
With art, and taught his warlike hands to wind
The silver strings of his melodious lyre.
Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love, b. i.

Let gifts be to the mighty queen design'd;
And mollify with prayers her haughty mind.
Id. Virgil. Æneis, b. iii.

— While the vocal flute,
Or number'd verse, by female voice endear'd,
Crowns his delight, and mollifies the scene.
Shenstone. The Ruined Abbey.

MOLT. } See MELT.
Mo'LTEN. }

MO'LY. Lat. Moly; Gr. Μωλυ, from μωλευειν, to mitigate. See the quotation from Pliny.

Homer is of opinion, That the principall and soveraigne hearb of all others, is moly; so called (as he thinketh) by the Gods themselves. The invention or finding of this hearbe hee ascribeth unto Mercurie; and sheweth that it is singular against the midnight witchcraft and enchauntments that bee.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 4.

And yet more med'cinal is it than that moly,
That Hermes once to wise Ulysses gave.—Milton. Comus.

The mere movement or motion; the smallest motion or progression of time; (momento temporis, horæ, &c.)

And all we schulen rise aghen, but not alle we shulen be chaungid, in a moment, in the twynkling of an ighe, in the last trumpe.—Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 15.

We shall not all slepe. But we shal all be chaunged, and that in a moment, and in the twinclyng of an eye, at the sounde of the last trompe.—Bible, 1551. 1b.

For oure exceedyng tribulacyon which is momentany and lyght prepareth an exceedyng and an eternall waight of glory vnto vs.—Id. 2 Corinth. c. 4.

For this mattre is not taken in hande by thee to be riche of momentange and false feyned goodes here in this worlde, but to attayne lyfe euerlastyng.—Udal. Tim. c. 6.

— No unbecoming deed
That argued fear, each on himself relid,
As onely in his arm the moment lay
Of victorie.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi
All these which in a moment thou behold'st,
The kingdoms of the world to thee I give.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Not one momental minute doth she swerve.
Breton. Sir P. Sidney's Ourania, (1606.)

Air but momentally remaining in our bodies, hath no proportionable space for its conversion, only of length enough to refrigerate the heart.—Brown. Vulgar Errors.

You will remember how transitorie this present life is, and how short and momentane the pleasure of this filthie flesh is.—Stow. The Mercians, an. 749.

To this purpose also it will much conduce, that we meditate often of our own frailty and momentaninesse.
Bp. Hall. The Remedy of Profaneness, s. 15.

How doth the momentaninesse of this misery add to the misery.—Id. The Character of Man.

None other fame mine unambitious Muse
Affected ever, but t'eternize thee:
All other honours do my hopes refuse,
Which meaner-priz'd and momentary be.
Daniel, son. 55.

He thought, and answer'd: hardly waking yet,
Sprung in his mind the momentary wit,
(That wit which, or in council or in fight, Still met th' emergence, and determin'd right.)
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

According to the commerce that God had established between this and the other world, momentary sorrows are improvable unto everlasting joys.—South, vol. x. Ser. 5.

Let me your counsel and assistance ask,
T' accomplish this momentous task.
Hughes. The Birth of the Rose.

— But attentive mark
The due clock swinging slow with sweepy sway,
Measuring time's flight with momentary sound.
Warton. Inscriptions.

Now, to apprehend the probability of these things coming to pass, or rather to remove any opinion of their improbability, we ought constantly to bear in our mind this momentous truth, that in the hands of the Deity time is nothing, that he has eternity to act in.—Paley, Ser. 22.

This preponderating weight being added to the force of the body of chicanes in the Tiers Etat, compleated that momentum of ignorance, rashness, presumption, and lust of plunder, which nothing has been able to resist.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

MO'NACHISM. See MONK.

MON

MONAD. Gr. Monas; Lat. of the Low. Ages, Monas; Fr. Monade. An unity or singleness. An one, (Cotgrave.)

In the philosophy of Leibnitz—a simple substance without parts.

But that which is of more moment yet; we have the authority of Ephantus a famous Pythagorean for this, that Pythagoras his monads, so much talked of, were nothing else but corporeal atoms.—Cudworth. Intel. System, p. 13.

The monadical consistency of the matter being lost in the production of the æther.

More. Defence of Philosophic Cabbala, App. c. 9.

MONARCH. Fr. Monarchie, monarchie; MONARCHAL. It. and Sp. Monarca, monarchia; Lat. of Lower Ages, Monarchia; Gr. Μοναρχία, monos, alone, and αρχος, governor. MONARCHISE, v. MONARCHISER. Sole governor, ruler, head, or chief. MONARCHIST. MONARCHY.

There Alexander put them vnder

The prince whom I now call (as I haue often before) the monarch of England, King, or Queene, hath absolutely in his power the authority of warre and peace. Smith. Common-wealth, b. ii. c. 4.

And thou sly hypocrite, who now woldst seem Patron of liberty, who more then thou
Once fawn'd and cring'd, and servilly ador'd Heav'n's awful monarch?—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

—Till at last
Satan, whom now transcendent glory rais'd
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride Conscious of highest worth, unmov'd thus spake. Id. Ib. b. ii.

Well may the programme of thy tragike stage
Invite the curious pompe-expecting eyes
To gaze on present showes of passed age,
Which just desert monarchicke dare baptize.
Stirling. To the Author of the Monarchicke Tragedies.

Which might happily also have taken place, if they had met with such a monarchicall reformation, as (through the blessing of God) was designed unto us. Bp. Hall. Noah's Dove.

By whom three sever'd realms in one shall firmly stand,
As Britain-founding Brute first monarchiz'd the land.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 5.

—If thou be worthy,
As well we know thou art, to fill the throane
Of all eternitie, then with that hand
That flings the trisulke thunder, let the pride
Of these our irreligious monarchisers
Be crown'd in blood.—Haywood. Rape of Lucrece, b. iii.

The Egyptians were the first of all men that were governed by the monarchie.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

The first, the most ancient, most general, and most approved, was the government of one ruling by just laws, called monarchy.—Ralegh. Hist. of the World, b. i. c. 9. s. 2.

—Monarchical their State,
But prudently confined, and mingled wise
Of each harmonious power.—Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

—Amid his subjects safe,
Slumbers the monarch-swain; his careless arm
Thrown round his head, on downy moss sustain'd;
Here laid his scrip, with wholesome viands fill'd;
There, list'ning every noise, his watchful dog. Id. Summer.

I proceed to examine the next supposition of the church monarchists, which is, That Saint Peter's primacy, with its rights and prerogatives, was not personal but derivable to his successors.—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

Our theory affords a presumption, that the earliest governments were monarchies, because the governments of families and of armies, from which, according to our account, civil government derived its institution, and probably its form, is universally monarchical.—Paley. Nat. Philosophy, b. vi. c. 1.

The monarchick, and aristocratical and popular partisans have been jointly laying their axes to the root of all government, and have in their turns proved each other absurd and inconvenient.—Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

MON

MONEY, n. Fr. Monnoye; It. Moneta; Sp. Moneda; Dut. Muntten, munte; Mo'NEYED. Ger. Muntzen, muntze; A. S. Mynet, from the verb Mynettian, to stamp, to coin. Skinner derives from the Lat. Moneta, and this, Vossius says, is from monere; and so named—quia nota inscripta monet nos autoris et valoris. But see MINT. Money is—

A stamped piece of metal; a coin. See the quotation from Adam Smith. And moneyer,—

A coiner: lately applied to the advocates of a currency in coin; and the monetary system,—as it was also called in opposition to a currency in paper.

The monoyes were established first, for as moche as they had not of alle thinges necessarye to gydre. That one had whete, another had wyn, &c. R. Brunne, p. 620. Note from Caxton's Image of the World.

—Moneyes thei walke
And with a good wil witlees. meny wyde contreys. Piers Plouhman, p. 125.

And Jhesus seyng him maad sory seyde, how hard thei that han money schulen entre into the kyngdom of God! Wiclif. Luke, c. 18.

But see what gold han vsurers,
And siluer eke in garners, Tallogiers, and these monicours.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.
And eke to coygne the money
Of sondry metall, as it is,
He [Saturn] was the first man of this.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And Jesus wēt into ye tēple of God, & cast out al the yt solde & boughte in ye tēple, & ouerthrew ye tables of ye mony chaūgers & ye seates of the that solde doves. Bible, 1551. Matthew, c. 21.

From the Latine word Moneta, came the old word among our English Saxon auncestores, Munt, which we now call Money, as the Germanes Muntz, the French Monoies, the Italians Moneta, and the Spaniards Moneda. Camden. Remaines. Money.

Above all things, good policie is to be used, that the treasure and moneyes, in a state, be not gathered into few hands.—Bacon. Ess. Of Seditions.

I remember a cruele monyed man in the country, that would say; The Devil take this usury, it keeps us from forfeitures of mortgages and bonds.—Id. Ess. Of Usury.

How can they justify to have turn'd those domestic privileges into the bar of a proud judicial court, where fees and clamours keep shop and drive a trade, where bribery and corruption solicits, paltring the free and moneyless power of discipline with a carnal satisfaction by the purse. Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

Little success is like to be found in managing a dispute against covetousness, which sways and carries all before it, in the strength of that great queen regent of the world, money, the absolute commandress of fleets and armies; and (which is more) very often their commanders too. South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

To prevent such abuses, to facilitate exchanges, and thereby to encourage all sorts of industry and commerce, it has been found necessary in all countries that have made any considerable advances towards improvement, to affix a public stamp upon certain quantities of such particular metals, as were in those countries commonly made use of to purchase goods. Hence the origin of coined money, and of those public offices called mints. Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 4.

A public bank by this expedient, might cut off much of the dealings of private bankers and money-jobbers. Hume. Ess. pt. i.

Monied men ought to be allowed to set a value on their money; if they did not, there could be no moneyed men. Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

Moneyage was also a general land-tax of the same nature, levied by the two first Norman kings, and abolished by the charter of Henry I.—Hume. Hist. of England, App. 2.

MONG-CORN, i. e. minged, mingled, mixed corn.

A jolly rounding of a whole foote broad

Smith. To the Memory of Mr. J. Philips.

There is none so prevalent in truth, though so little owned in pretence, as that it is an enemy to men's pleasures, that it bereaves them of all the sweets of converse, dooms them to an absurd and perpetual melancholy, designing to make the world nothing else but a great monastery.
South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Let not vain man, then, under the name and notion of philosophy, insult and revile, as a monkish and solitary principle, that doctrine, on which the Son of God has thought proper to lay the deep foundations of his religion, the doctrine of self-denial.—Horne. Works, vol. v. Dis. 1.

Libraries were also formed in all the monasteries, and schools founded in them and near most of the cathedrals, for teaching the literature of the times.

MONKEY. The It. Mona, or monna, is derived by Menage from the Gr. Μίμω, simia. Mon- key, (Skinner says,) is clearly enough monikin vel monkin. Homunculus,—a little man; nihil enim homini similis.

There is to this day a merrie tale; that his monkie (set on

MONOCHORD. Gr. Μονοχορδος; an instrument of one (μονη) chord.

Although by this election of wise and graue councillors all things seem'd to be brought to a good and perfect conclusion, yet there lacked a wrest to the harpe, to set all the strings in a monachorde or tune.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 1.

MONOCULAR. } Fr. Monocule; It. Mono- MONOCULOUS. } colo; i. e. one-eyed; having only one eye; Gr. Μονος, and Lat. Oculus.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because she budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes and made him monocular.
Houell.

We judge truth to be circumscrib'd by the confines of our belief, and the doctrines we were brought up in; and with as ill manners as those of China, repute all the rest of the world monoculous.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 15.

MONODY. Gr. Μονωδια; μονη, one, and ωδη, an ode or song.

A song by one. See the quotation from Bp.
Newton.

In this monody, the author bewails a learned friend, unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester on the Irish seas, 1637.—Milton. Lycidas, Title.

It is called a monody from a Greek word signifying a mournful or funeral song, sung by a single person.
Bp. Newton. Note on Milton's Lycidas.

MONOGAMY. } Fr. Monogamie; Gr. Μονος, MONOGAMIST. } one, and γαμος, marriage;
contradistinguished from Bigamy, (qv.)

If he had ever read the booke following, of monogamie, he might have found his Tertullian (then Montanizing) to upbraid the true and catholike church, which he calls Psychicos, with the usuall practice and allowance of the second mariages of their bishops.

Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 14.

MONOGRAM. } Lat. Monogrammus; Gr.
MONOGRAMMAL. } Μονογραμματος, μονον, alone, MONOGRAMMOUS. } and γραμμα, a writing, a delineation, from γραφειν, to write, to delineate;
as if delineated, lined, or done in lines only, (sig- num nominis, continuato literarum ductu,—Vos- sius, de Vit. lib. iii. c. 27.)

In compasse of no art it came To be described by a monogram.—B. Jonson. My Answer.

Though it be but as it were a monogrammal description,

Fotherby. Atheom, p. 355.

As for those romantick monogrammous Gods of Epicurns, had they been seriously believed by him, they could have been nothing else but a certain kind of aerial & spectrous men, living by themselves, no body knows where, without the world.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 60.

MONOLOGUE. Gr. Μονος, one, and λογος, a speech; Fr. Monologue; is applied to the person who speaks.

A speech by one, i. e. alone; a soliloquy.

I can show in Shakespear many scenes of rhyme together, and the like in Ben Jonson's tragedies; in Catiline and Sejanus sometimes thirty or forty lines; I mean besides the chorus or monologues.—Dryden. Essay of Dram. Poesie.

Whether the monologues, or long speeches—the μακρα ρησεις, as Plato calls them—were performed in the same way as the rest of the dialogue, or as it has been imagined, were distinguished by being more measured and lausical,
is a point not easily cleared up.
Twining. Aristotle. On Poetry, vol. ii. Note 46.

MONO'MACHY. Fr. Monomachie; Gr. Μονη, one, and μαχη, fight, battle, combat.
A single combat; one against one.

Two armies are ready to joyne battell, the field is sure to be bloody on both sides; either chuses a champion; they two fight for all. The life of one shall ransom a thousand.
Our philosophers, our lawyers shout for applause of this monomachy, as a way neere, easie, safe: I dare not.
Bp. Hall, Ep. 2. Dec. 4.

The morning came—and man to man,
The grand monomachy began.—Smart. The Duellist.

MONO'POLIZE, v. } Fr. Monopoler, mono-

Of euery ware that is accompted strange.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

And therefore is thys ware Judas all in thynne owne hande.
Thou hast a monopoly thereof.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1303.

And in very truth, many have gotten great gaine and profit by this commoditie and merchandise, and namely, with their craftie devise of monopolies, that all might passe through their hands only, notwithstanding there hath not ben any one disorder more repressed, and reformation sought by sundry edicts and acts of the senate in that behalfe:
every prince hath been continually troubeled here about with grievous complaints out of all provinces.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 36.

But especially care must be taken, that monopolies, which are the cankers of all trading, be not admitted under specious colours of the public good.
Bacon. Advice to Sir G. Villiers, s. 20.

Only there passed a law, at the suit of the merchant-adventurers of England, against the merchant-adventurers of London, for monopolizing and exacting vpon the trade.
Id. Hen. VII. p. 163.

It may be doubted there was in it the fraud of some old patentees and monopolizers in the trade of bookselling.
Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

He thinks he can never trade to his advantage, unless he can have the monopoly of every thing he values.
South, vol. v. Ser. 10.

Mr. Martin spoke of a "country that groaned under the burthen of monstrous and unconsonable substitutes to mo- nopolitans of starch, tin, fish, cloth, oil, vinegar, salt, and what not.—Oldys. Life of Sir Walter Raleigh.

For how do some (as it were) monopolize the covenant of grace wholly to themselves, calling themselves the only people of God, the saints, the godly.—South, vol. x. Ser. 1.

Joy is an import; joy is an exchange;
Joy flies monopolists; it calls for two;
Rich fruit! heaven-planted! never pluckt by one.
Young. The Complaint, Night 2.

Descamps says, that Leley growing jealous of Roestraten, proposed to him a partition of the art; portraits were to be monopolized by Leley.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

MONOSTROPHIC. Gr. Μονοστροφος, an ode having or consisting of one strophe,—μονη στροφή.

The measure of verse used in the chorus is of all sorts called by the Greeks monostrophic, or rather apoclymenon, without regard had to strophe, antistrophe, or ephod, which were a kind of stanzas fram'd only for the music then us'd with the Chorus that sung.—Milton. Samson Agonistes, Pref.

MONOSYLLABLE. } Fr. Monosyllabe; It. Monosillabo; Sp. Monosyllaba; Lat. Monosyllabus; Gr. Μονή, one, and συλλαβή, a syllable, (or, as B. Jonson writes it, a syllabe.) comprehensio literarum in unum integrum sonum, (Martinius.) See SYLLABLE, and DISSYLLABLE.

A word of one syllable.

It shall suffice us to take things as we find them, and to hold it for granted, that this monosyllable (for so it is in many languages) comprises all that intellectual and affective world which concerneth man; and in plaine termes to say, that when God saies, The heart is deceitfull, hee meanes the understanding, will, affections are deceitful.

Bp. Hall. The Great Impostor.

Nine taylors, if rightly spell'd,

Churchill. The Rosciad.

MONOTHEISM. } Gr. Μονος, and Θεος, God.
MONOTHEIST. } A belief in one God.

A people whose ancestors were ignominiously prone to idolatry, through a series of ages, in opposition to every principle of common sense, to the express prohibitions of Jehovah, and to every motive of gratitude or of interest, have continued firm in their abhorrence of idolatry, and in their adherence to pure monotheism, under every persecution.

Cogan. Discourse on the Jewish Dispensation, c. 2. s. 7.

The general propensity to the worship of idols was totally subdued; and they became monotheists in the strictest sense of the term. To this point all the dispensations of God were directed; and it is precisely at this point that the sacred history terminated.—Id. Ib.

MONOTONE. } Gr. Μονος, one, and τονος, MONOTONICAL. } tone, from τείν-ειν, intendere;
MONOTONOUS. } vocem vel sonum intendere;
MONOTONY. } to stretch the voice or sound.

One tone, or tune, (sc.) continued; a continuance of one or the same tone, or sound.

A kind of chaunt that frequently varies very little from a monotone.—Mason. On Church Musick, p. 95.

Every line was perhaps uniformly recited to the same monotonous modulation with a pause in the midst.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii. Emend.

Our earliest poets were fond of multiplying the same final sound to the most tedious monotony.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 21.

Monotony is the great fault into which writers are apt to fall, who are fond of harmonious arrangement: and to have only one tune, or measure, is not much better than having none at all.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 13.

We should not be lulled to sleep by the length of a monotonical declamation.—Chesterfield.

MONSIEUR, i. e. Mon sieur; applied very early by our poets in derision to a Frenchman.

A shoeless soldier there a man might meet Leading his monsieur by the arms fast bound;
Another his had shackled by the feet,
Who like a cripple shuffled on the ground.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

MONSOON. Fr. Monson, mousson. Thevet not says the word is Arabic, (Maúsím.) and means season. Maffee,—that it is from the Lat. Motiones.

That the monsoons and trade winds should be so constant and periodical even to the 30th degree of latitude all round the globe, and that they should so seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds, is a subject worthy of the thoughts of the greatest philosophers.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

They often lose the benefit of their monsoons, and much more easily other winds, and frequently their voyage.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 771.

Milton. Lycidas.

After ten great miracles in Egypt, and some in the same place, they melted down their stoin ear-rings into a calf, and monstrously cryed out: These are thy Gods O Israel, that brought thee out of the land of Egypt.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

We desire no records of such enormities, sins should be accounted new, that so they may be esteemed monstrous.
They omit of monstrosity as they fall from their rarity; for men count it venial to erre with their forefathers, and foolishly conceive they divide a sin in its society.

Id. Ib. b. vii. c. 19.

We shall tolerate flying horses, black swans, hydras, centaurs, harpies, and satyrs; for these are monstrosities, rarities, or else poetical fancies, whose shadowed moralities requite their substancial falsities.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 19.

This is the monstrositie in loue lady, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd; that the desire is boundlesse, and the act a slau to limit.

Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act iii. sc. 2.

B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. sc. 4.

These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

We sometimes read and hear of monstrous births, but we may often see a greater monstrosity in educations; thus when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast.

South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

Down sunk the monster-bulk and press'd the ground:
His arms and clattering shield on the vast body sound.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. x.

—'Tis so strange, that your monstership's crany
Should be envied by him, much less by Delany.

Swift. Dr. Delany's Reply.

A monster, which hath not the shape of mankind, but in any part evidently bears the resemblance of the brute creation, hath no inheritable blood, and cannot be heir to any land, albeit it be brought forth in marriage.

Dut. Maene; Sw. Maene; Kilian, and after him Wachter, derives the latter class from mæn-en, (A. S. Monian), monere. Wachter supports his opinion by reference to the regard which was paid to the moon, and her changes, by our German ancestors; and adds,—the moon warns or admonishes the husbandman of the seasons for sowing and planting, and of other things pertaining to agriculture, as recorded by Cæsar and Tacitus. (See the quotations from them.) Ihre doubts. Tooke says that month (anciently written mooneth) means—the period in which that planet, the moon, moneth, or compleateth its orbit. But this decides nothing as to the origin of the word moon;—to mone or moon may be a verb or usage of a verb formed upon the noun, and signify merely to be, or become, or cause to be, a moon;

and, consequentially, to complete the orbit of that planet.

But why is moon so called? Wachter seems to give the best reason, and Dr. Jamieson adopts his etymology: the names which were given to some of the months may help to confirm their judgment.
Such are mede-month, weed-month, harvest-month.

Spelman calls month-day,—lamentatio mensurna;
and Somner,—gemynd-dag, dies commemorationis, that day which our ancestors called their moneths- mind, their year's mind, and the like: being a day wherein their soules (after their deaths) were had in special remembrance, and some office or obse-quies done for them; such as obits, trentals, &c.

A mooncalf is an imperfect fœtus, so called, because it is supposed to be occasioned by the influence of the moon. Hence it became a term of reproach.

MO'RAL, adj.

MO'RAL, n.

MO'RAL, v.

MO'RALLER.

MO'RALIST.

MORA'LITY.

MO'RALIZE, v.

MORALIZA'TION.

MO'RALLY.

Fr. Moral, moralizer; It. Morale, moralizzare; Sp. Moral, moralizar; Lat. Moralis, from mos, which Martinus thinks is from meare, to go, —signifying via, a way. See IMMORAL.
A moral man is—a man whose way of life, whose mode or manner of acting, is guided or governed by the laws of natural or revealed religion. A moral act,—an act consistent with those laws. And thus morality, generally,—

Obedience to, consistency with, those laws which guide or govern the mode or manner of action of men as social beings. And hence the science of morals is—

That science which teaches men their duty, and the reasons of it.

Moral is also distinguished from physical or mathematical; (e. g.) a moral certainty,—from a certainty arising from the evidences of the senses, or from mathematical demonstration. See the second quotation from Locke.

To moralize,—to be or cause to be moral; or of a moral nature or character; to treat or deliberate morally or upon morals or moral topics.

O morall Gower, this booke I direct

To thee, and to thy philosophical Strophe.

Chaucer. The Testament of Creseide.

Forsooth o maner gentrie is for to preise, that appareilleth mannes corage with vertues and moralitees, and maketh him Cristes child.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Or though a man of high or low degree,

Of Tullius had the sugred eloquence,

Or of Seneca the moralitee.—Id. Ballad of Good Counsaill.

Wherof ensamples ben enowe

Of hem, that thilke merell drowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

They do constur in diuers sēs almost euery text in scripture, sometyme after the letter, sometime moral, & sometime otherwise, and al to the profit and edifyg of the hearers.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 322.

By the tyme that the chylde doth come to xvii. yerres of age, to the intent his courage be byrdled wyth reason, it were nedfull to rede vnto hym some warkis of phylosophy, spically that parte that maye enforme hym vnto vertuous maners, whiche parte of phylosophy is called moral.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 11.

It is more commendable, and also comodious, if the players haue red the moralization of the chesse, and whā they playe do thynke vpon it: which bokes be in Englysh.

Id. Ib. b. i. c. 26.

Nature surely (if she will be studied) is the best moralist;
and hath much good counsel hidden in her bosome.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 77.

The end of morality, is to procure the affections to obey reason, and not to invade it.

Bacon. On the Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. s. 1.

That which is said of the elephant, that being guiltie of his deformitie, he cannot abide to looke on his owne face in the water, (but seekes for troubled and muddy channels,) we see well moralized in men of euill conscience, who know their soules are so filthy, that they dare not so much as view them.—Bp. Hall. Med. & Vowes, c. 2. s. 4.

A book of moralizations upon Ovid's Metamorphoses.

Baker. Hen. V. an. 1422.

If, then, the original itself was extant for so long a time, it was easie to compare the copies with it, and morally impossible but that the curiosity or religious care of many, should make them to do it.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iv. c. 1.

And he that shall collect all the moral rules of the philosophers, and compare them with those contained in the New Testament, will find them to come short of the morality delivered by our Saviour, and taught by his Apostles; a college made up for the most part of ignorant but inspired fishermen.—Locke. The Reasonableness of Christianity, &c.

I am bold to think, that morality is capable of demonstration, as well as mathematicks; since the precise real essence of the things moral words stand for, may be perfectly known; and so the congruity or incongruity of the things themselves be certainly discovered; in which consists perfect knowledge.—Id. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 11. s. 16.

She sigh'd; she smil'd: and, to the flowers

Pointing, the lovely moralist said:

See, friend, in some few fleeting hours,

See yonder, what a change is made.—Prior. Garland.

A moral agent is a being that is capable of those actions that have a moral quality, and which can properly be denominated good or evil in a moral sense, virtuous or vicious, commendable or faulty.

Edwards. On the Freedom of the Will, pt. i. s. 5.

Moral philosophy, morality, ethics, casuistry, natural law, mean all the same thing, namely, that science which teaches men their duty and the reasons of it.

Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. i. c. 1.

[The love of God] is one of those many peculiar circumstances which so eminently distinguish the doctrines of the Gospel from the dry unanimated precepts of the ancient heathen moralists.—Porteus, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Morality is the rule which teaches us to live soberly and honestly. It hath four chief virtues, which moral writers have well explained; justice, prudence, temperance, and fortitude.

Bp. Horne. Works, vol. vi. Charge to the Clergy of Norwich.

Political reason is a computing principle; adding, subtracting, multiplying, and dividing, morally, and not meta-physically or mathematically, true moral demonstrations.

Mo'RENESS.

Mo'REOVER.

A. S. Mæ, mare; Ger. Mer;

Dut. Meer; Sw. Mer. Skinner

suggests the Lat. Major. Tooke accounts for more, most, thus,—

Mow, or move, is the pret. and past part. of A. S. Maw-an, metere, (in Dut. Meyen, Ger. Mähen, Sw. Mäja.) and means simply that which is mowed or mown; and as the hay, &c. which was mown was put together in a heap, hence, figuratively, move was used in A. S. to denote any heap, and was pronounced (and therefore written) with some variety, ma, mæ, mo, mowe, mow, which, being regularly compared, give,

Ma, ma-er, (A. S. mare.) maest, (mæst.)

Mæ, mæ-er, (mære.) mæ-est, (mæst.)

Mowe, mower, (more.) mow-est, (most.)

Mo, mo-er, (more.) mo-est, (most.)

Mo, (mowe, acervus, heap,) which was constantly used by all our old English authors, has with the moderns given place to much; which is merely the diminutive of mo, passing through the gradual changes of mokel, mykel, mochel, muchel, (still retained in Scotland) moche, much.

VOL. II.

Dr. Jamieson asserts that this hypothesis labours under several considerable difficulties. One alone deserves notice, viz. that the A. S. Ma, is as really a comparative, as mare, both being used adverbially in the sense of plus, magis; to which it may be answered, that mare, or maer, is grammatically a comparative formed by the addition of the termination er to ma; but that ma itself is not a comparative by any grammatical formation, and that the simple circumstance of its being used in the sense of plus, magis, will not constitute it etymologically a comparative. Less is not so; our elder writers, following analogy, added the termination er, (see Er.) and wrote lesser. The meaning of less will account for its usage, as applied to something smaller than, or not so large as, something else; and the meaning of ma or mo will account for its usage, both as applied to something large (positively) and to something larger (comparatively) than something else. Let that which is mow-en be heaped, accumulated, raised, as is usual, into small heaps or stacks, each stack will be a mow, or quantity mown: put several together, the accumulation is still a mow; put all in one, the whole coacervation is still a mow or stack, containing the quantity mown; and the reason of the application of the word to increase or enlargement appears evident from this practice of increasing or enlarging the heaps by repeated coacervations, till the whole were raised into one heap. Mo, or ma, became thus, by consequence, a comparative term: its positive meaning remained unaltered: the addition of the termination er constituted the grammatical comparative, which has obtained exclusive use. The progress with less, lesser, has been different. More, adj.—

MORN. } Goth. Maurgino; A. S. Mergen, MORNING. } morgen, marne; Dut. Morgen; Ger.
MORROW. } Morgen. The elder etymologists have nothing to say respecting these words; Tooke's researches are most happy. Morrow, morn, and morning, were in old English written Morew, morew, morewende; in A. S. Merien, mer- gen, merne; margen, marne, or morgen, morn; and he believes them to be the past tense and past part. of the Goth. and A. S. verb Merjan, merran, mirran, myrran, to dissipate, to disperse, to spread abroad, to scatter; morr, the regular past tense of this verb, pronounced and written Morwe, morew, and subsequently morowe, morrow, by adding the participial termination, en, merg-en, merien, mer'n; marg-en, mar'n, morg-en, morn; or morewen, morew'n, mor'n. Morrow and morn then have the same meaning, viz. dissipated, dispersed, (sub.) clouds or darkness, whose dispersion, or the time when they are dispersed, these words express.
Morning, the pres. part. Myrrende, in old English Morewende, (ende, as usual, converted into ing), as in Chaucer—morwening; thence moreweng, mor- wing, morning.

Morning is, by usage, applied to a considerable portion of the day succeeding the dispersion of darkness; and morrow, to-morrow, to the whole day next following to-day.

MORTAL, adj. Fr. Mortel, mortifier; It. Mortale, mortificare; Sp. Mortal, mortificar; Lat. Mortalis, from Mors, death. Vossius throws forth about half a dozen conjectures without relying upon any one. Tooke is of opinion, that it is one of those words which the Latin borrows from the A. S. Morth, morthre, the third person of the verb Myrran, to mar, and consequentially to destroy, (sub.) life. (See MURDER.) Our words Mortal, &c. return to us from the Latin.

Destructive, or able to destroy, to kill, or cause to die; deadly: also opposed to divine or immortal, and consequentially, human. To mortify—

To die, or cause to die, to destroy or lose the vital powers, the health, the strength; to decay, to corrupt: (met.) to subdue, to subject, to debase, to humiliate; to feel humiliation, or the vexation of being humiliated; to vex.

MORTAR. Fr. Mortier; It. Mortario;

Mo'RTRESS, or } Sp. Mortero; Lat. Mortarium;

Mo'RTREWE. } Ger. Morser, and A. S. Mortere.

The Latin etymologists derive mortarium from moretum, a hotchpoch of herbs, cheese, &c. and this from the Gr. Mopos or μepos, a part or portion. It is more probably from the A. S. Myrran, to mar, to destroy. (See MORTAL.) Applied to—

That which destroys, breaks to pieces, bruises, or that in which any thing is—broken, bruised, or crushed, or pounded. And, afterwards (as Wachter observes) applied to a kind of gun from the resemblance in shape.

It is also applied to the composition used in building, because the ingredients were bruised or pounded together. See the second quotation from Pliny.

State Trials. Sir Walter Raleigh, an. 1603.

But mortuum vadium, a dead pledge, mortgage, (which is much more common than the other,) it is when a man borrows of another a specific sum, (e.g. 200l.) and grants him an estate in fee, on condition that if he, the mortgagor, shall repay the mortgagee the said sum of 200l. on a certain day mentioned in the deed, that then the mortgagor may reenter on the estate so granted in pledge.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 10.

When this resource is exhausted, and it becomes necessary, in order to raise money, to assign or mortgage some particular branch of the public revenue for the payment of the debt, government has upon different occasions done this in two different ways. Sometimes it has made this assignment or mortgage for a short period of time only, a year, or a few years, for example; and sometimes for perpetuity.

but there is one which seems more probable than any that he has given us: viz. that these purchases being usually made by ecclesiastical bodies, the members of which (being professed) were reckoned dead persons in law, land therefore, holden by them, might with great propriety be said to be held in mortua manu.—*Blackstone. MOSA'ICK, adj. } Fr. Mosaïque, mosaïque; MOSA'ICK, n. } It. Mosaico, mosaico; Sp. MOSA'ICAL. } Mosayaca. The Lat. Musivum is used by Spartian, (quoted by Menage in his Dictionary, and by Vossius, de Vit. c. 11.) and those who executed mosaick work were called musivarii. The Gr. Μουσα, μουσικον, were applied generally to express neatness, elegance, neatly or elegantly performed, fitted or adapted; and Scaliger infers that this kind of work was so called—a concinnitate et elegantia. See Musivum Opus, in Du Cange.

But that Pythagoras was acquainted with the Mosaical, or Jewish philosophy, there is ample testimony of it in writers; as of Aristobulus, an Egyptian Jew, in Clemens Alexandrinus, and Josephus against Appion.

More. Defence of the Philosophic Cabbala, c. 3.

The Mosaic law, as it was planned by unerring wisdom, was unquestionably admirably well contrived for the great purposes for which it was intended—to maintain the knowledge of the true God among a particular people, and to cherish an opinion of the necessity of an expiatory sacrifice for involuntary offences, till the season should arrive for the general revelation.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 21.

MOSQUE. Fr. Mosquée; It. Moschea; Sp. Mesquita. Menage observes that throughout the oriental languages Sagad signifies to adore, and that the Arabic Mesgid is a place of adoration.

Is there then a certain primitive power and substance of cold—or, rather are we to hold and say, that cold is the privation of heat, like as darkness of light and station of moving; and namely, considering that cold is stationary and heat motive?—Holland. Plutarch, p. 813.

Besides, another motive-power doth rise
Out of the heart, from whose pure blood do spring
The vital spirits; which, born in arteries, Continual motion to all parts do bring.
Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 23.

— So these respects, which were

But soon were with their times and motives lost.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

These bodies likewise being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 2.

Surely many things fall out by the design of the general motor, and undreamt-of contrivance of nature, which are not imputable unto the intention or knowledge of the particular actor.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 10.

I do accordingly here leave that old, trite, common argument, (though nevertheless venerable for being so,) drawn from a constant series, or chain of causes leading us up to a Supreme Mover, (not moved himself, by any thing but himself, a being simple, immaterial, and incorporeal:) I leave this, I say, to our high and mighty atheists to baffle and confute.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

We met the carrier coming the way we were going, who assured us, that the cavaliers had eased them at Basingstoke of all their superfluous movables.

Though these insects did in so short a time grow moveless, yet they were not so soon killed.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 176.

In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its end produce;
Yet serves to second too some other use.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 1.

He [Christ] does not only hear our sighs, but also feels the cause of them: and if we suffer by the direct impressions of pain, he also suffers by the movings and yearnings of his own compassion.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 8.

And in effect, there is a strange movingness; and, if the epithet be not too bold, a kind of heavenly magick to be found in some passages of the scripture, which is to be found no where else; and will not easily be better expressed, than in the proper terms of the scripture.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 319.

The atomists, who define motion to be a passage from one place to another, what do they more than put one synonymous word for another? For what is passage other than motion?—Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4. s. 3.

Tis plain the meaning of the question, What determines the will? is this; what moves the mind, in every particular instance, to determine its general power of directing to this or that particular motion or rest? And to this I answer, the motive for continuing in the same state of action is only the present satisfaction in it; the motive to change is always some uneasiness; nothing setting us upon the change of state, or even upon any new action, but some uneasiness. This is the great motive that works on the mind to put it upon action, which for shortness' sake we will call determining of the will.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 21. §. 29.

MO'ULDERING, n. } To decompose into mould or earth; to crumble or fall to pieces; to perish by decomposition into minute particles.

Indeed with the workes of man it is not soe, when he hath employed about them all the cunning and cost, and care that may be, he can neither preserue them nor himselfe, both they and hee moulder away and returne to their dust.
Hakewill. Apologie, c. 8. s. 2.

The ninth [means to induce and accelerate putrefaction] is by the interchange of heat and cold, or wet and dry; as we see in the mouldering of earth in frosts and sunne.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 337.

Thus the ideas, as well as children, of our youth, often die before us; and our minds represent to us those tombs, to which we are approaching; where the brass and marble remain, yet the inscriptions are effaced by time, and the imagery moulders away.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 10.

As the whole transaction was miraculous, it was just as easy to Omnipotence to restore life and form to a body mouldered into dust, as to reanimate a body that was preserved uncorrupted and entire.—Porteus, vol. ii. Lect. 15.

MOUND, v. } A. S. Mund, septum, perhaps MOUND, n. } from A. S. Mund-ian, tueri, protegere; to defend or protect: but it seems more probably to be a mount, or something raised, (sc.) as a fence, or defence. The A. S. Mund-ian is merely a consequential usage of mynd-ian, to mind. To mound—

To raise, (sc.) a fence or defence.

We'll rob the brim of ev'ry fountain,
Strip the sweets from ev'ry mountain,
We will sweep the curled vallies
Brush the banks that mound our alleys.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 3.

The warlike elfe much wondred at this tree,
So fayre and great, that shadow'd all the ground;
And his broad branches, laden with rich fee,
Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound,
Of this great garden, compast with a mound.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

In elder days ere yet the Roman bands
Victorious, this our other world subdued,
A spacious city stood, with firmest walls
Sure mounded and with numerous turrets crown'd.

Fr. Monter, mont, montaigne; It. Montare, monte, montagna; Sp. Montar, monte, montana, from the Lat. Mons; which Scaliger thinks is—απο του μενειν, that is, manendo, whose preterperfect is μεμνηνα, whence μνος, qui remansit solus, and from μνος, mons, quia permanet, nec loco movetur, because it remains, and is not removed from its place.

Mount, the noun, is—
A raised or elevated place, raised ground.

To mount,—to rise, to raise, to elevate, to ascend, climb, come or go up. See to AMOUNT.

Mountance, mountenance,—the amount or sum, the height.

Mountebank,—It. Montimbanco, montare in banco,—one who mounts upon a bench, (sc.) for some purpose of quackery; hence a quack, a clamorous pretender or boaster.

And vorto passy the mouns. R. Gloucester, p. 220.

Upon an highe mountaine, he sigh
Two serpentes in his weye nigh. Id. Ib. b. iii.

And I bode in the place stille,
And was there but a litell while,
Not full the mountance of a mile. Id. Ib. b. viii.

Betwixt her breasts (which sweetly rose up like two fair mountainets in the pleasant vale of Tempe) there hung a very rich diamond set but in a black horn.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

And then what a madnesse is it for the poore pleasure of your worldly goods for so fewe yeares, to caste youre selfe both bodye and soule, into the euerlastyng fyre of hell, whereof there is not mynyshed the mountenance of a momente.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1231.

The sport which for that day Basilius would principally show to Zelmane, was the mounty of a hearn, which got up on his waggling wings with pain, till he was come to some height as though the air next to the earth were not fit for his great body to fly through.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

The mounture so well made, and for my pitch so fit,
As though I see faire peeces moe, yet few so fine as it.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of the Greene Knight.

When he was readle to his steede to mount
Unto his way, which now was all his care and court.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

She had not rid the mountenance of a flight,
But that she saw there present in her sight
Those two false brethren on that perilous bridge.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6.

So mountingly, I touch'd the stars, methought.
Massinger. Old Law, Act ii. sc. 1.

Most writers agree that Porus was four cubits and a shaft length high, and that being upon an elephant's back he wanted nothing in hight and bigness to be proportion-able for his mounture, albeit it were a very great elephant.
North. Plutarch, p. 584.

Stares like a mountebank who had forgot
His viol, and the cursed poysen took
By dire mistake before his antidote.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 6.

latelie spoke of him admiringly, and mournfully.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc. 1.

Reluctant now I touch the trembling string,
Bereft of him who taught me how to sing;
And these sad accents, murmur'd o'er his urn,
Betray that absence they attempt to mourn.
Tickel. On the Death of Mr. Addison.

Yet if he steps forth with a Friday look, and a lenten face, with a blessed Jesu, a mournful ditty for the vices of the times; oh! then he is a saint upon earth; an Ambrose or an Augustine.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

Her pinions ruffle, and low dropping, scarce
Can bear the mourner to the poplar shade;
Where all abandon'd to despair, she sings
Her sorrows through the night. Thomson. Spring.

As the apostle says of circumcision and uncircumcision, so say I here, that neither mourning for sin, or confession of it, avail any thing but a new creature.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 6.

No more thy soothing voice my anguish cheers;
Thy placid eyes with smiles no longer glow,
My hopes to cherish, and allay my fears.
'Tis meet that I should mourn: flow forth afresh, my tears. Beattie. The Minstrel, b. ii.

I [Pericles] am surprized, that while you dwell upon and extol these acts of mine, though fortune had her share in them; and many other generals have performed the like, you take no notice of the greatest and most honourable part of my character, that no Athenian, through my means, ever put on mourning.—Langhorne. Plutarch. Pericles.

Which the poore heart would faine deny, and dare not.
Id. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 3.

Many speeches also were put into the mouths of wrong persons, where the author now seems chargeable with making them speak out of character: or sometimes, perhaps, for no better reason, than that a governing player, to have the *mouth*ing of some favourite speech himself, would snatch it from the unworthy lips of an underling.
Pope. Pref. to Shakespeare.

She found the veil, and *mouth*ing it all o'er Gascoigne. Gardenings.

Who so gladly halseth the golden meane,
Voide of daungers advis'dly hath his home
Not with lothsome muck, as a den uncleane
Nor palace like, wherat disdain may glome.
Surrey. Praise of Meane and Constant Estate.

But minds of mortall men are muckell mard
And mov'd amisse with massy muckes unmeet regard.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

And money is like mucke, not good except it be spread.
Bacon. Ess. Of Seditions.

The first that devised mucking of grounds, was (by report)
Augeas, a king in Greece: but Hercules divulged the practice thereof among the Italians.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 9.

You knew her little and when her Apron was but a muckender.
On Dr. Corbet's Marriage, (from Wit Restor'd, 1658.)

But all his mind is set on mucky pelfe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

— Oh Mediocrity
Thou priceless jewel, only mean men have
But cannot value; like the precious gem
Found in the muckhill by the ignorant cock.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Queen of Corinth, Act iii. sc. 1.

Each muck-worm will be rich with lawless gaine,
Altho' he smother up mowes of seven years graine,
And hang'd himselfe when corn grows cheap again.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 6.

Ah! Gaffer Pestel, what brave days were those When higher than our house our muck-hill rose!
Jago. The Scavengers.

Me (humbler lot!) let blameless bliss engage,
Free from the noble mob's ambitious strife,
Free from the muck-worm miser's lucrous rage,
In calm contentment's cottag'd vale of life.
Cooper. The Tomb of Shakespeare.

MUCK. "I have learned," says Malone, "that a-mocca, or a-muck (for so the word should be written) is used in the Malay language adverbially, as one word, and signifies, if we may so write, killingly."—Malone. Additional Note to Dryden.

He [Lucian] ran a muck, and laid about him on all sides, with more fury on the Heathens, whose religion he professed; he struck at ours but casually, as it came in his way, rather than sought it.—Dryden. Life of Lucian.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discrete
To run a-muck and tilt at all I meet.
Pope. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 1.

MUCKER, v. } A. S. Mucg, muga, a heap.
MUCKERER. } (See MUCH, and MORE.)
Chaucer renders the Lat. Coacervare, to mucker; and the It. has Ammuchiare, mucchiare, mocchiare, to heap up, to accumulate. Scot. Mochre, (see Jamieson.)

Lord, trowe ye that a coveitous wretch,
That blameth love, and halte of it despite,
That of the pens that he can muckre and ketch
Ever yet yave to him soche delite,
As is in love.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iii.

Certes, that gold and that money shineth, and yeueth better renome to them that dispenden it, than to thilke folke that mockeren, for avarice maketh alwaile muckerers to ben hated, and largesse maketh folke dere of renome.
Id. Boecius, b. ii.

But as sone as thy backe is turned frō the preacher, thou runest on with al thy forecasting studies, to muckre vp ryches.—Udal. James, c. 1.

MUCOUS. See MUCILAGE.

Its food being flies and such as suddenly escape, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, where by upon a sudden emission it inviscates and tangleth those insects.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

MUCRO. } Lat. Mucro, a point; Gr.
MUCRONATED. } Mukpos, small.

True it is that the mucro or point thereof inclineth unto the left.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 2.

Gems are here shot into cubes consisting of six sides and mucronated or terminating in a point.—Woodward.

MUDDINESS. } &c.) wetted. To mud,—
To cover with, to bedaub with mud; and, consequently,—to bedaub, to pollute, to defile; to turmoil, to disturb. And muddy,— Foul, turbid; thick, dull.

Call back the bloud that made our stream in nearness,
And turn the current to a better use;
'Tis too much mudded; I do grieve to know it.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman Hater, Act v. sc. 3.

Partly that she may the better, by this closeness, preserve her own natural taste and vigour from the corruptions of the world; and partly, that she may not be defiled and mudded by the prophane feet of the world.
Bp. Hall. Hard Texts. Song of Solomon, iv. 12.

She runs her silver front into the muddy fen.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

Dot. You muddie rascall, is that all the comfort you giue me?—Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 1.

— The people muddied,
Thicke and vnwholsome in their thoughts, and whispers
For good Polonius' death; and we haue done but greenly
In hugger mugger to interre him.
Id. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

It seems a very wilde leap of nature, that the soul of man, from being so deeply and muddily immersed into matter as to keep company with beasts, by vitall union with gross flesh and bones, should so on a suddain be changed.
More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 1.

The country about Pheræ was thick set with trees, and otherwise full of gardens and mud-walls.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. v. c. 4. s. 14.

It soon ended in a secret lamentation, that the fountains of every thing praise-worthy in these realms, the universities, should be so muddied with a false sense of this virtue as to produce men capable of being so abused.
Spectator, No. 484.

I say, had all this globe been mire or mud, then could there have been no possibility for any animals at all to have lived, excepting some few, and those very dull and inferior ones too.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

But I shall not stir in the waters, which have been already mudded by so many contentious enquiries.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

He never muddles in the dirt
Nor scowrs the street without his shirt.
Swift. Dick's Variety.

If none invite you, sir, abroad to roam,
Then—Lord, what pleasure 'tis to read at home:
And sip your two half-pints with great delight,
Of beer at noon, and muddled port at night.
Pitt. Dialogue between a Poet and his Servant.

— Take care
The muddy beverage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser, ropy lees.—J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

The purest water issuing from the fountain, when it slides into a dirty and muddy kennel, immediately loses its clearness and virginity, and becomes as filthy as the place in which it runs.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

The mud-fed carp refines amid the springs.
Armstrong. An Epistle to John Wilks, Esq.

The ribbon, fan, or muff that she Would should be kept by thee or me,
Should not be giv'n before too many.
Suckling. To his Rival.

MUL

The palefac'd Night beheld thy heavy chear,
And would not let one little star appear,
But over all her smokey mantle hurl'd,
And in thick vapours muffled up the world.
Drayton. Mortimer to Queen Isabel

Such [bees] as carrie the flowers above said, stuffe the inner parts of their legs behind (and those Nature for that purpose hath made rough) with the helpe of their fore feet, and those againe are charged full by the meanes of their muffle.
Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 10.

He brought with him diuers things, which he ment to present her, with his own hands, that is to say, a partlet, a muffler, a cup, and other things.—Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1539.

A philosopher that says, That which supports accidents is something he knows not what; and a country-man that says, The foundation of the great church at Harleam is supported by something he knows not what, and a child that stands in the dark upon his mother's muff, and says he stands upon something he knows not what, in this respect talk all three alike.—Locke. Letter to the Bishop of Worcester.

Her fur is destin'd still her charms to deck,
Made for her hands a muff, a tippet for her neck.
Pitt. The Fable of the Young Man and his Cat.

When the malefactor comes once to be muffled and the fatal cloth drawn over his eyes, we know that he is not far from his execution.—South, vol. i. Ser. 12.

Balbutius muffled in his sable cloak,
Like an old druid from his hollow oak,
As ravens solemn, and as boding, cries,
"Ten thousand worlds for the three unities!"
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 3.

MUG. } Skinner suggests the Welsh Mwg- MUGGY. } lio, to warm, q. d. a vessel to warm liquor in. It means merely a wet, (sc.) a draught of liquor; afterwards applied to,—

A vessel for containing liquor. Muggy is—Wet, damp, dank; (dense and damp, with some degree of warmth.) See MUCK.

The clamorous crowd is hush'd with mugs of mum,
Till all, tun'd equal, send a general hum.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

He has the confidence to say, that there is a mug-house near Long Acre, where you may every evening hear an exact account of distresses of this kind.—Tatler, No. 180.

At other times the circling mug,
Like Lethe's draught, or opiate drug,
Will strike the senses on a heap,
When folks talk wise, who talk asleep.
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle to a Friend.

Get a ride as soon as weather serves. Deuced muggy still.
An Italian winter is a sad thing, but all the other seasons are charming.—Lord Byron. Diary, Jan. 6, 1831.

MUGGER. See HUGGER.

MUGIENT. } Quintilian supposes the Lat.
MUGIENCY. } Mugitus to be formed from the sound. From mugiens, pres. part. of mugire, to low or bellow.

4. That a bittor maketh that mugient noyse, or as we term it bumping, by putting its bill into a reed as most believe, or as Bellonius and Aldrovandus conceive, by putting the same in water or mud, and after a while retaining the ayr but suddenly excluding it again, is not so easily made out.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 27.

Whether the large perforations of the extremities of the weazon, in the abdomen, admitting large quantity of ayr within the cavity of its membranes, as it doth in frogs, may not much assist this mugiency or boation, may also be considered.—Id. Id.

MULBERRY. Dut. Muylbeere; Ger. Maulbeer, bacca mori, and derived from the Lat. Morus, r into l, no unusual change, (Wachter.) Somner and Lye have A. S. Mur-berian.

And ouer the olyue trees and mulberry trees that were in the valeyes was Baal Hanan the Gadarit.
Bible, 1551. 1 Chronicles, c. 27.

In the 5th year, he gave order for planting of mulberry-trees, and breeding of silk worms, that England might be a country, as well of silk as cloth.—Baker. K. James.

MULCT, v. } Fr. Multer; It. Multare; MULCT, n. } Sp. Multar; Lat. Multare, to MULCTUARY. } amerce. Vossius quarrels with the etymology of Varro, and with good reason, but has no better to propose.

To amerce, to impose, to exact an amercement, fine, or penalty.

How many poore creatures hast thou mulcted with death for thine own pleasure.—Bp. Hall. A Meditation on Death.

For the offence, a mulct imposed on the possessors of Blackmore (called white-hart silver) is to this day paid into the exchequer.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2. Selden. Illust.

A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
Had not Eternal Wisdom found the way.

Dryden. Religio Laici.

The last common branch of the king's revenue, consisted of forfeitures, both of lands and goods, in cases of treason; and fines, or some known mulctuary punishments upon other crimes which were distinctly prescribed in the Saxon laws even for manslaughter and murder itself.

Sir W. Temple. Introd. to the Hist. of England.

MULE. } Formerly also written Moyl.
MULET/ER. } Fr. Mule, mulet; It. Mulo; Sp. Mulo; Lat. Mulus. Vossius suggests four several etymologies. One, the Gr. Μολος, labour, he supports by a reference to Pliny. See the quotation from Holland.

The mule is a cross breed from the horse and ass; and the word is applied to other productions out of their specific course.

Mulish, (met.)—stubborn, obstinate.

— & myd so gret charge therto
Of mules, of cartis and of horse.—R. Gloucester, p. 189.

And thus after hir lordes graunt,

To plague you above all other
As one prejudicial to their muliebrity.

Soliman & Perseda, (1599.)

If the said lands should according to the queens lawes descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierite borne; and the other not so borne.—Holinshed. Chron. of Ireland, an. 1558.

MULL, v. } Vinum molitum; i. e. rendered MULSH, v. } milder by admixture of sugar, and MULSH, n. } having its spirit subdued by warmth. It is probably from the A. S. Mil-escian, mitescere. Hanmer (on Shakespeare) says, softened, and dispirited as wine is when burnt and sweetened. Lat. Mollitus.

Mulsh, which Ray calls straw half rotten, is from the same source; to mulsh the roots of trees, is to lay about them straw or other litter, softened or saturated with water; also to soften or saturate the earth itself.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargie, mul'd, deafe, sleepe, insensible, a getter of more bastard children then warres a destroyer of men.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 5.

Now we trudg'd homeward to her mother's farm
To drink new cyder mul'd with ginger warm.

Gay. The Shepherd's Week, Past. 5.

While gen'rous white-wine, mul'd with ginger warm,
Safely protects her inward frame from harm.

And all this mullok in a sive ythrowe,
And sifted, and ypicked many a throwe.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,408.

That other coffe of strawe and mull,
With stones mened [mixed] he silde also.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

MULLIGRUBS seems to have an application somewhat similar to that of Maw-worm, viz. to some unknown disease in the bowels, for which fanciful causes are assigned: the latter part of the word will then be easily accounted for; and as to the first, Dr. Jamieson is too learned.

Thom. What's the matter?
Whether go all these men-menders? these physicians?
Whose dog lies sick o' th' mulligrubs?

Beaum. & Fletcher. Monsieur Thomas, Act ii. sc. 2.

MULTIFARIOUS. } Lat. Multifarius, from MULTIFARIOUSLY. } multum, and fari, quod multis modis est fari; sic Græcis πολυφατος, a φάω, fari; deinde non sermonis tantum, sed et aliis varietatibus dicitur, (Martinius.) Generally, Various, or having many variations; diversified.

When a man acts with a multifarious intention he must needs be distracted in his operations, and the force of his faculties being divided by the multiplicity of his aims, must needs be so weakened, that 'twill be impossible for him to pursue any one of them with vigour and activity.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

— The beauteous lake,
The pines wide-branching, falls of water clear,
The multifarious glow on Flora's lap
Lose all attraction.

Glover. Leonidas, b. iv.

The generic words which abound in language assort, and (if I may use the expression) pack up under a comparatively small number of comprehensive terms, the multifarious objects of human knowledge.

Stewart. The Human Mind, vol. ii. c. 2. s. 2.

MULTIFIDOUS. Lat. Multifidus, in multis partibus fissus, from findere, to cleave.
Cleft, or divided into many parts.

Thus much we may observe, those animals are only excluded without sight, which are multiparous and multifidous, that is, which have many at a litter, and have also their feet divided into many portions.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 27.

MULTIFORM. } Lat. Multiformis (multus, MULTIFORMITY. } and forma, a frame, or shape.)

Having many forms or shapes, many appearances; various, or divers, in form, shape, or appearance.

Air, and ye Elements the eldest birth
Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

How prophane are others? barking out a multiformity of oaths like hellish Cerberi, as if men could not be gallants, unlesse they turned devils.

Purchas. His Pilgrimage. To the Reader.

From that most one God flowes multiformity of effects, and from that eternall God temporall effects.

Bp. Hall. Noah's Dove.

That the πολυποικιλος σοφια, the manifold or multiform wisdom of the Creatour might be displayed, acknowledged, and celebrated.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

You have seen, that, by virtue of that peculiar structure which brings them under these rules of interpretation, the most multiform of the scripture prophesies do equally with the most simple afford a positive evidence of God's providential government of the world.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

MULTIPAROUS. Bearing, or bringing forth, (Lat. Parere,) many—at a litter. See MULTIFIDOUS.

Which double formations do often happen unto multiparous generations.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 15.

Multiparous quadrupeds, as dogs, as swine, are furnished with a multitude of paps: whereas those beasts which bring forth few, have but a few.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Some things do through our judgment pass
As through a multipliyng-glass.—Cowley. Ode. Of Wit.

Those substances which are whole in the whole are by his own doctrine neither divisible nor multiplicable, and how then can Christ's body be supposed to be multiplicable (for there are no other words to express my meaning, though no words can speak sense according to their doctrine, words not signifying here as every where else, and among them as they did always in all mankind) how can it, I say, be multiplied by the breaking of the wafer or bread upon the account of the likeness of it to a substance that cannot be broken, or if it could, yet were not multipliable?

Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, s. 11.

They [the purveyors] are the only multipliers in the world; they have the art of multiplication.

Bacon. A Speech touching Purveyors.

Therefore the multipliyng of nobilitie, and other degrees of qualitie, in an over proportion, to the common people, doth speedily bring a state to necessity.—Id. Ess. Seditions.

Good deeds are very fruitfull; and not so much of their nature, as of God's blessing multipliable.

Bp. Hall. Meditations & Fows, Cent. 3.

Item, you commaunded multiplication and alcumistrie to bee practised, thereby to abate the king's coine.

Stow. Edw. VI. an. 1549.

For properly the animal [Amphisbæna] is not one, but multiplicious or many, which hath a duplicity or gemination of principal parts.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 15.

For the seed conveyeth with it not only the extract and single idea of every part, whereby it transmits their perfections and infirmities; but double and over again; whereby sometimes it multipliously delineates the same as in twins, in mixed and numerous generations.—Id. Ib. b. vii. c. 2.

To see the multiplicity of books
That pester it, may well believe the press,
Sick of a surfeit.

Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

— Echo with their sorrow sports;
From hill to hill from grove to grove she bounds,
And catches, breaks, and multiplies the sounds.

Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. vi.

There is another thing considerable in this multiply number of the eye; and that is, that the object seen is not multiplied as well as the organ, but appears but one, though seen with two or more eyes.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2.

This sense [smelling] I shall dispatch in less compass than the two last, because its apparatus, although sufficiently grand and admirable, (yet) is not so multiplious as of the eye or ear.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 4.

Moreover, as the manifold variation of the parts, so the multiplicity of the use of each part, is very wonderful.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

In the fecundity of the human, as of every other species of animals, nature has provided for an indefinite multiplication.—Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. vi. c. 11.

MULTIPOTENT. Lat. Multipotens, multum, much, and potens, powerful.
Having much power.

— By Jove multipotent,

Thou shouldst not beare from me a Greekish member Wherein my sword had not impresse made
Of our ranke feud.—Shakes. Troyl. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

MULTIPRESENCE. Multum, much, and præsens, present, or being before.

A being before (sc. sensible) in many places at once.

I would that exploded opinion of Transsubstantiation, and (which is the root of it) the multi-presence of Christ's body, did not utterly overthrow the truth of his humanity.

Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, s. 25.

properly—amumia, from amomum, of eastern origin, (Vossius, Et. L. L.) In the 2d book De Vitiis, he derives mumia from the Arabic Mum, which signifies—wax. He explains it to be—

The flesh of man preserved against corruption in balsam or myrrh, and aloes and asphalt. It is also applied to—

That which distils from mummies; the stuff wherewith they have been long embalmed; any gummous substance; a soft, coagulated mass.

MUNICIPAL. } Fr. Municipal; It. Municipalis; Lat. Municipalis; Municipes, a munere capiendo, sic appellantur; and were thus,—muneris cum populo Romano honorarii participes. Municipalis lex, quæ propria est cujusque municipii. (See Vossius.) (A bye-law. See BYE.) Municipal, as now used, is—

Of or pertaining to a town or township; to a district of a certain number of towns; and (as by Blackstone extended) to one whole state or nation.

The greatest part of this booke is bestowed in the description of the colleges and collegiate houses founded in this cittle, for the professors of the municipall or common law of this land.—G. Buck to Sir Ed. Coke. The Third Universitie.

Episcopacy is and hath long been settled in this kingdom, and (as it were) incorporated into it, and enwoven into the municipall laws of this land.—Bp. Hall. The Modest Offer.

Municipal law is also "a rule of Civil conduct." This distinguishes municipall law from the natural, or revealed; the former of which is the rule of moral conduct, and the latter not only the rule of moral conduct, but also the rule of faith.—Blackstone. Commentaries, s. 2. Introd.

We provide first for the poor, and with a parental solicitude, we have not relegated religion (like something we were ashamed to shew) to obscure municipalities or rustick villages.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

MUNIFICENT. } Fr. Munificence; It. Munificenza; Sp. Munificencia; Lat. Munificentia,—applied to liberality or largess, in munis faciendis, i. e. in exhibiting the usual public games to the people; and then, generally, to—Liberality, generosity, bountifulness.

That God doth graciously accept, and munificently recompence our good works even with an incomprehensible glory, wee doubt not.—Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, c. 5. s. 2.

Who [King Edward the Sixth] is not to be mentioned, without particular honour, in this house, which acknowledges him for her pious and munificent founder.

Blacklock. Hymn to Divine Love.

From a thorough conviction of this truth, our munificent benefactor Mr. Viner, having employed above half a century in amassing materials for new modelling and rendering more commodious the rude study of the laws of the land, consigned both the plan and execution of these his public-spirited designs to the wisdom of his parent university.

Blackstone. Commentaries, vol. i. s. 1. Introd.

The institution of a school of statuary in the house of a young nobleman [the Duke of Richmond] of the first rank rivals the boasted munificence of foreign princes.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. Pref.

MUNITE, v. } Fr. Munir, munition; It. Munire, munizione; Sp. Municion; Lat. Munitio, from munire, to enwall, or surround with walls, (muris), to defend, to fortify.

MUNITION. } To defend, to fortify, to strengthen, to secure. Muniments,—securities, writings, evidences, records, as securities for right or title.

By munificence, Spenser means defence or fortification, from munio, and facio: and Warton justly calls it an injudiciously coined word.

By protracting of tyme and longe space Kyng Henry might fortifie & munite all daungerous places and passages w^t souldiours & men of warre.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 11.

The destroyer is come before thy face, keep thy munition, loke to the way, make [thy] loynes strong: increase [thy] strength mightily.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Nahum, ii. 1.

The archbishop answered that hee tooke nothing in hand against the king's peace, and he was in armour, & munited with men only for feare of the king whome hee could not safely come vnto to speake.—Slow. Hen. IV. an. 1405.

This action of our death especially Shows all a man. Here only he is found.
With what munition he did fortify
His heart.—Daniel. Death of the Earl of Devonshire.

Men must be ware, that in the procuring or munition of religious unity they do not dissolve and deface the lawes of charity and of humane society.

Bacon. Ess. Of Unity in Religion.

To those I may answer, that I have put up these colours in deed, that those vessels I would speak with, might not fly from piety at first sight, as from an enemy to pleasure, that speaking with them, I might shew them how devotion coming and possessing our minds, doth rather compose the munition, then infringe the true liberty of our affections.

Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 4. s. 2.

Upon a day, as she him sate beside,
By chance he certain muniments forth drew,
Which yet with him as reliques did abide,
Of all the bounty which Belphebe threw

The inward firmness of one must be corroborated by the exterior munitions of the other.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 4.

The defended city shall be desolate: no defence or munition can keep out a judgment, when commissioned by God to enter.—Id. vol. viii. Ser. 5.

MURDER, or } A. S. Myrthrian; Goth. Maurthjan; Ger. Morden; Dut. Moorden; Sw. Moerda; Fr. Meurtrir. It is Tookey's opinion that the noun Mur is the A. S. Morthe, the third pers. sing. of the A. S. verb Myrr-an, to mar; (see MORTAL, and MORROW;) but it seems more probable that the Goth. and A. S. verb Maurthjan, myrthrian, were formed upon this third person, and the English noun and verb from it. The primitive meaning of the Goth. and A. S. verb is—to dissipate, to disperse, to spread abroad, to scatter: and Morthe, quod dissipat, (sub. vitam,) that which dissipates, dissolves, and consequentially destroys life. (See MIRTH.) To murder then is,—

To mar, to destroy; to destroy life, to kill, or quell, to put to death.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

The name of murder (as a crime) was anciently applied only to the secret killing of another; (which the word moerda signifies in the Teutonic language;) and it was defined, homicidium quod nullo vidente, nullo sciente, clam perpetratur.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 14.

This [amercement] was an ancient usage among the Goths in Sweden and Denmark, who supposed the neighbourhood, unless they produced the murderer, to have perpetrated or at least connived at the murder; and, according to Bracton, was introduced into this kingdom by King Canute, to prevent his countrymen the Danes from being privily murdered by the English.—Id. Ib.

Cruel with guilt, and daring with despair,
The midnight murderer bursts the faithless bar,
Invades the sacred hour of silent rest,
And leaves, unseen, a dagger in your breast.
Johnson. London.

MURE, v. } Fr. Murer, muraille; It. Mur, murale; Sp. Murar, mural; Lat. Murus, a wall, muralis. Muraled. } Murus, anciently written mærus, is derived by Scaliger and Vossius from Gr. Moipa, pars, rata scilicet cujusque civis pars.—Scaliger; quia quisque pro ratâ parte muros, extruebat, reficiebat, ac tutabatur.

To wall or enwall,—to compass or surround with walls; to fortify, to strengthen; to enclose, to shut up.

At last, when as he found his force to shrink,
And rage to quaille, he tooke a muzzle strong
Of surest yron, made with many a linke;
Therewith he mured up his mouth along,
And therein shut up his blasphemous tong.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

It is a witty and good observation of Gregory that the prophet prays, set a door before my lips; a door, not a wall: he would not have his tongue mured up for all occasions.—Bp. Hall. Ser. at Hampton, Sept. 1624.

Other durst not front the battle of the Macedonians, which was so strongly imbattered on every side, and so mured in with a wall of pikes, presenting their armed heads on every side a man could come, that it was impossible to break them.—North. Plutarch, p. 213.

Agasilaus his [Pausanias] father pursued him into the temple of Minerva called Calciæcos, whither he fled for sanctuary; where he caused the doors of the temple to be mured up with brick, and so famished him to death.

MURMURING, n. waters, a little roughened.
MURMUROUS. Vossius does not think from the verb Mur-ew, to flow, but formed from the sound, in which opinion he was preceded by Varro and Quintilian. (See SIBILANT.) And the application certainly is—

To make the noise, to utter the sound of roughly or hoarsely flowing water; or a similar noise or sound: to utter an indistinct, continuous, hoarse sound: (met.) to utter the sounds of complaint, repining or discontent; to complain, to repine.

Holinshed. The Description of England, b. iii. c. 8.

But with his clownish hands their tender wings
He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

What, if God, willing to show the riches of his mercy, calls and accepts of some at the very last hour of the day, and rewards them equally with those that came in at first; have we any thing to reply against such a proceeding, or to carp at his justice, or murmur at our brother's felicity.

South, vol. ix. Ser. 7.

By long obedience he confest
That serving her was to be blest.
Ye murmurers, let True evince
That men are beasts, and dogs have sense!
Prior. True's Epitaph.

This should silence the proud regrets and murmurings of our hearts, at the absoluteness of God's decrees and purposes: for why may not his decree be as absolute as his power?—South, vol. viii. Ser. 9.

Round his swoln heart the murmurous fury rolls.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

Yet hark, how through the peopled air
The busy murmur glows! Gray. Ode on the Spring.

In the mean time I shall make a shew of some of my defences, if it be only to convince the murmurers, that I shall not capitulate upon the first summons.—Observer, No. 91.

MURR. } Skinner,—from Lat. Mori; Min-MURRAIN. } shew,—from Gr. Μαται-ew, tabes- cere. It is from the A. S. Myrr-an, to mar; to dissipate, to destroy.

The old noun murr, was applied to that which mars or destroys, (sc. the speech or utterance.) Murrain,—to that which destroys life: a destructive disease, plague, pestilence.

And God on hem sendeth other meschaunce moreyne.
Piers Plouhman, p. 42.

The hande of the Lord shal be vpon thy catel which thou hast in ye felde, with a mighty great morayne.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 9.

The wodhackle that singeth churre
Horsly as hee had the murre.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparrow.

Empedocles is of this advice, that together with the respiration of the lights odours also are intromitted and let in:
when as then the said respiration is not performed at liberty and ease, but with much adoe, by reason of some asperity in the passage we smell not at all, like as we observe in them who are troubled with the pose, mur, and such like rheumes.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 685.

This plague of murrein continued twenty-eight yeare ere it ended, and was the first rot that euer was in England.
Stow. Edw. I. an. 1257.

His cattle must of rot and murren die,
Blotches and blaines must ali his flesh emboss,
And all his people. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

In the latter part of the book he relates the diseases incident to cattle; and ends with the description of a fatal murrain that formerly raged among the Alps.
Dryden. Georgics, b. iii. Argument.

— I then had plann'd a life
Where wealth attends the middle stage,
And rest and comfort wait on age,
Where rot and murrain ne'er commence.—Cotton, Fab. 6.

MURREY, adj. } From Fr. Morée, morel, MURREY, n. } moreau; It. Morello; Sp.
Morado, so called from the colour of the Moors, (sc.) obscure or dark; or rather from the colour of the mulberry, (mori.) verging from red towards black, (Skinner.) Menage prefers the former.

The chanons of the same chappell in their mantles of murrey, and roundlet of S. George.—Stow. Edw. IV. an. 1476.

The leaves of some trees turne a little murray or reddish;
and they be commonly young leaves that do so.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 512.

So stibium or glass of antimony, appears somewhat red in glass, but in its powder yellow; so painted glass of a sanguine red will not ascend in powder above a murrey.

MUSCADEL. } Fr. Muscadel, muscat; It.
MUSCADINE, adj. } Moscatello, so called either MUSCADINE, n. } from their scent of musk, or because flies (musca) feed eagerly upon them;
in confirmation of the latter the Uva Apiana of Pliny are referred to. See Menage and Skinner; and the quotation from Pliny.

And at night to banquet with dew (as they say) of all maner of fruits and confections, marmelade, succad, grene ginger, comfettes, sugar plate, with malmesay and romney burnt with sugar, synamon & cloues, with hastarde, mus- cadell and ipocrasie.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 229.

As touching the muscadell wines, (Apiana) they tooke that name of bees, which are so much delighted in them, and desirous to settle and feed of them.
Holland. Plinie, b. xiv. c. 2.

Most decoctions of astringent plants, of what colour soever,
do leave in the liquor a deep and muscadine red.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

This will buy brawn this Christmas yet, and muscadine.

More probably from the Greek verb Mueiv, to cover; because the muscles cover or clothe the bones. Cotgrave calls the Fr.—

Muscle,—the instrument of voluntary motion, compounded of sinews, veins, arteries, tendons,
and flesh, and having a skin peculiar to itself.

And with fell tooth accustomed to blood,
Launched his thigh with so mischievous might
That it both bone and muscles ryved quight.
Spenser. Astrophel.

The tendinous [fibres] are parallel and direct between the two ends of a muscle. And upon these the far greater stress of the muscular action doth depend.
Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 4. s. 14.

The guts of a sturgeon, taken out and cut to pieces, will still move, which may depend upon their great thickness and muscularity.—Id. Museum.

Yea, and withall, it [the baine or bath] doth mitigate and cause to vanish and passe away the secret lassitudes of the musculous members.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 509.

— She [Sculpture] saw the head,
Breathing the hero, small, of Grecian size,
Scarce more extensive than the sinewy neck;
The spreading shoulders, muscular and broad.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. v.

The uvous coat or iris of the eye hath a musculous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil or sight of the eye.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

And therefore almost the whole musculous flesh of the body is bestow'd upon the tail and back, and serves for the vibration of the tail, the heaviness and corpulency of the water, requiring a great force to divide it.—Id. Ib. pt. i.

[Isaac Fuller] understood the anatomic part of Painting, perhaps equal to Michael Angelo, following it so close, that he was very apt to make the muscelling too strong and prominent.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

This part was very bad, and the colouring of the Saturn too raw, and his figure too muscular.—Id. Ib.

MUSICK)—

To follow the Muses, to be contemplative or thoughtful, as one who follows the Muses; to meditate, dwell upon, keep the mind fixed or employed upon; to weigh, to ponder.

Musard,—one who muses or spends his time in musyng; a dreamer.

Muse, the noun, is sometimes applied to the poet.

Comen is the Sarazin to speke with Sir Edward,
Clad in clothes fyn, himself is a mosard.
R. Brunne, p. 229.

Desherte Edward of alle his seignorie,
Of Jon Baliol musard sulk was his courtesye.—Id. p. 266.

He thought assaie howe that it ferde. Id. Ib. b. viii.

Sir, leave your musynge and come into y^e hall, if it please you, your dinner is all redy.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 77.

At this question, all the Lords sate sore astonied, musynge much by whom this question should be meant, of which euery man wist himselfe cleere.—Stow. Edw. V. an. 1483.

So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favour my destin'd urn:
And, as he passes, turn
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
Milton. Lycidas.

And touching this matter, it is reported that the theater being full of people, Phocion walked all alone upon the scaffold where the players played, and was in great use with himself: whereupon, one of his friends seeing him in one of his uses, said unto him, Surely Phocion thy mind is occupied about somewhat.—North. Plutarch, p. 624.

It is to be wonder'd how useless and unbookish they were, minding nought but the feats of war.
Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

There flowry hill Hymettus, with the sound Of bees' industrious murmur, oft invites
To studious using. Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

The morning, we know, is commonly said to be a friend to the Muses, but a morning's draught is never so.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

— Meanwhile, in useful mood
Absorpt in thought, on vengeance fix'd he stood.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

Here Grief with holy usings may converse
In sounds, that best shall greet the glorious hero's herse.
Warton, Ode 10.

Then, Goddess, guide my pilgrim feet
Contemplation hoar to meet,
As slow he winds in useful mood,
Near the rush'd marge of Cherwell's flood.—Id. Ode 11.

Say, scenes of science, say, thou haunted stream,
(For oft my Muse-led steps didst thou behold)
How on thy banks I rifled every theme,
That Fancy fabled in her Age of gold.
Mason, Elegy 3. To Hurd.

MU'SET. Steevens refers to the Fr. Trouée, in Cotgrave,—“A gap or muset in a hedge.”

The many musits through the which he goes,
And like a labyrinth to amaze his foes.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

MUSE'UM. Gr. Movσeiov, a place dedicated to the Muses, to literature, to philosophy; to the preservation of rare and curious articles.

Of museums, galleries of paintings and statues, public libraries, &c. I need only say that they exist in almost every town in Italy, and open an ample field to the exercise of observation and curiosity.—Eustace. Italy, vol. i. Prel. Dis.

MU'SHROOM. Fr. Mouscheron. Salmasius thinks they are so called—a musco, because they grow—ubi brevissima est herba, et plerumque non-nisi muscus, where the herbage is very short, and scarcely aught except moss. Applied (met.) to—Any thing of sudden growth from lowly origin.

The mushrooms have two strange properties; the one that they yeeld so delicious a meat; the other, that they come up so hastily, as in a night, and yet they are unsown.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 546.

Mean while the king did not neglect Ireland, being the soyle where these mushrooms and vpstart weedes (that spring vp in a night) did chiefly prosper.

Id. Hen. VII. p. 138.

But as for such mushroom divines, who start up of a sudden, we do not usually find their success so good as to recommend their practice.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

MU'SICK. } Fr. Musique; It. and Sp.
MU'SICAL. } Musica; Lat. Musica; Gr.
MU'SICALLY. } Movσικη, from μωσα, musa.
MU'SICALNESS. } J. Scaliger,—from μωσα or μαω,

And she, more sweet then any bird on bough
Would oftentimes amongst them bear a part,
And strive to passe (as she could well enough)
Their native musicke by her skilful art.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Therein the merry birds of eveyre sorte
Chaunted alowd their chearefull harmonie,
And made amongst themselves a sweete consort,
That quickned the dull spright with musical comfort.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 5.

The sweet lip'd sisters musically frighted,
Singing their fears, are fearfully delighted.
Crashaw. Music's Duel.

— And I thinke
The nightingale if she should sing by day
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician then the wren?
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act v. sc. 1.

She said;—in air the trembling music floats,
And on the winds triumphant swell the notes:
So soft, though high, so loud, and yet so clear,
Ev'n listening angels lean from heaven to hear.
Pope. The Temple of Fame.

How soft the music of those village bells,
Falling at intervals upon the ear
In cadence sweet, now dying all away,
Now pealing loud again and louder still,
Clear and sonorous, as the gale comes on!
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

Thine too those musically falling founts,
To slake the clammy lip. Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

The peculiar musicalness of the first of these lines, in particular, arises principally from its consisting entirely of iambic feet.—Dr. Warton. Essay on Pope.

The name of the Muses, and universally that of music, was derived, as it seems, from μωσθαι, to inquire, and from investigation and philosophy.
Taylor. The Cratylus of Plato.

MUSK. } Fr. Musc; It. Muschio; Low Lat.
MU'SKY. } Muscus; in Arabic Mosch, or musch.
The word is applied to a perfumed substance said to be obtained from an animal of the same name.
Musky,—

Sweetly scented or perfumed, sweetly odoriferous, fragrant.

Their vessels of yuory comprehendeth al their combs,
their muske balles, their pomauder pottes, &c.
Bale. Image of bothe Churches, pt. iii.

And yet, as Paracelsus encourageth, ordure makes the best musk, and from the most fetid substances may be drawn the most odoriferous essences.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 26.

And though the problem of Aristotle enquire why none smells sweet beside the parde? yet later discoveries add divers sorts of monkeys, the civit cat and gazela, from which our musk proceedeth.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 10.

— There eternal Summer dwells,
And West winds, with musky wing,
About the cedarn alleys fling
Nard and cassia's balmy smells. Milton. Comus.

The glowing violet,
The musk-rose and the well attir'd woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang their pensive head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears.
Id. Lycidas.

Jove! what a coyle these muske-wormes take to, to purchase another's delight? for, themselves, who bear the odours, have ever the least sense of them.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 4.

Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Nor amber, but a rich result of all;
So she was all a sweet, whose every part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art.
Dryden. Eleonora.

Thee April blithe as long of yore
Bermuda's lawns he frolick'd o'er
With musky, nectar-trickling wing,
(In the new world's first dawning spring)
To gather balm of choicest dewes. Warton, Ode 11.

MUSKET. } Fr. Mosquet; It. Moschetto; MUSKETE'ER. } Sp. Mosquete.

MUSKETO'ON. } A very small species of hawk was so called, from moschetto, a little fly, or a troublesome stinging fly, as Warburton expresses it. And a musket (or small gun) is supposed to be a further consequential usage.

Some shall stop muskets, and so kill a foe.
Donne. Upon Mr. Thomas Coryat's Crudities.

He will never come within the signe of it, the sight of a cassock, or a musket-rest againe.

And shuttle-cocks across the counter fly.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

MUSS. Fr. Mousche; the play called musse.
Mr. Nares observes, that musse is one of Garagantua's games, (b. i. c. 21;) and is mentioned again, (b. iii. c. 40,) “a Muscho inventore.” In our poets it is used as equivalent to—A scramble.

Authority melts me of late. When I cried, ho,
Like boyes vnto a musse, kings would start forth,
And cry, “your will.”
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11.

Cos. Buy any peares, very fine peares, peares fine.

That he the faith moste nedes obey.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The must three times together; I wear as sharp steel as another man, and my fox bites as deep, musted, my dear brother.—Beaum. & Fletcher. A King, and no King, Act iv.

Much thou hast yet to see, but I perceive Thy mortal sight to fail; objects divine
Must needs impair the wearie human sense.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Of systems possible, if 'tis confest
That wisdom infinite must form the best,
Where all must fall or not coherent be,
And all that rises, rise in due degree;
Then, in the scale of reasoning life, 'tis plain,
There must be, somewhere, such a rank as man.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 1.

Where then shall Hope and Fear their objects find?
Must dull suspense corrupt the stagnant mind?
Must helpless man, in ignorance sedate,
Roll darkling down the torrent of his fate?
Must no dislike alarm, no wishes rise,
No cries invoke the mercies of the skies?
Johnson. Vanity of Human Wishes.

MUST. Fr. Mouste; It. and Sp. Mosto; Lat. Mustum; Gr. Μοσχος, young, new. Mustum is applied to any thing, not wine merely, new. Must, in English, to—

New wine, or other fermented liquor, in its uncleaned state.

And othere scornynen, and seiden for these men ben ful of must.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 2.

As touching musts or new wines, the first and principall difference of them lyeth in this, That some by nature are white, others blacke, and others againe of a mixt colour between them both.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 1.

The must, of pallid hue, declares the soil
Devoid of spirit; wretched he, that quaffs
Such wheyish liquors; oft with colic pangs,
With pungent colic pangs distress'd he'll roar,
And toss, and turn, and curse th' unwholesome draught.
J. Philips. Cider, b. 1.

MUST, v. } From the Fr. Moiser; Lat. Muc-ere— MUSTY. }
MUSTINESS. } To be or become foul, by confinement from air, or by disuse; to be or become fusty, stale, stagnant.

Fr. Mystère, mystique; It. and Sp. Misterio, mistico; Lat. Mysterium, mysticus; Gr. Μυστηριον, μυστικος. Vossius exhibits a variety of conjectures. The opinion of Eustathius, adopted by Lennep and Valcknaer, seems well founded. From Μεμυσται, the third person of the pret. pass. of μυειν, claudere, were formed μυστης, qui claudit et celat, and hence μυστηρ, μυστηριον, quod clauditur et celatur; that which is shut up, hidden, or concealed. And a mystery is, generally,—

Any thing shut up, hidden, or concealed: and, consequentially, that cannot be perceived or understood.

A mystick,—one who pretends to mysteries, or doctrines or opinions that cannot be understood or comprehended.

So the word mystery, though at first restrain'd to signify only a ceremony not to be divulged: yet by use (against which, to argue, is like disputing against matter of fact) whatever else is any way secret, or abstruse, either not at all, or not entirely, or not easily understood, is said to be mysterious.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. v. c. 6. s. 42.

Could we have a more pregnant demonstration of a reconciled God, than a sacrificed son, nay than the blood of that son? and that so mysteriously, and yet so really, conveyed to us?—Id. Ser. 5.

A third cause of the unavoidable mysteriousness of the chief articles of the Christian religion is that most of them fall, neither within the common course of men's actings, nor the compass of their observation.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 6.

The ceremonial law, with all its mystic rites (which, like the manger of the shepherds, holds forth wrapped in his swathing clothes the infant Jesus) to many, that bestow the reading on it, seems scarce worth it: yet what use the apostles made of it with the Jews?

Time was when, I knew not what, mystical meanings

no allusion could reasonably be supposed to any thing beyond the particular occasion, upon which they were introduced.—Id. Ser. 1.

The epithet sublime is strongly and happily descriptive of the feelings inspired by the genius of that author [Plato];
by the lofty mysticism of his philosophy; and even by the remote origin of the theological fables which are said to have descended to him from Orpheus.

Geddes coins the word, Mythologue, "in the fair mint of English analogy:" he applies it to the exposition; the Fr. to the expounder.

Mythology,—A discourse of or upon; an exposition or explication of, a system of fable or fabulous story, a history.

All which may still be received in some acceptions of morality, and to a pregnant invention, may afford commendable mythologie: but in a natural and proper exposition, it containeth impossibilities, and things not consistent with truth.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 8.

Surely, it is no marvell that (as our mythologists tell us of old) discord took it ill that she was not called to the banquet of the celestial powers, but shut out of the doors of heaven.

vented his Hexahemeron, or six days creation, to enforce more strongly the observance of the sabbath; which I think more than probable; may we not, in like manner, consider his history of the Fall, as an excellent mythologue, to account for the origin of human evil: and of man's antipathy to the reptile race.—Geddes. Pref. to Translation of the Bible.

N.

N, says Wilkins, is tinnitus, when the breath is sent out, the limbus (or tip) of the tongue being fixed towards the gums, or bottom of the fore teeth. In the pronouncing of this, the breath is emitted only out of the nose: (in which and in the lips, as B. Jonson remarks, it ringeth somewhat more than the letter M.) They (he adds), (i. e. M and N.) are letters near of kin both with the Latins and us.

NA, i. e. no, (qv.)

Our corne is stolne, sothly it is na nay,
And we han had an yvel fit to day.

NAB. In Swed. Nappa, prehendere, to catch, (Lye.) It is of common use in vulgar speech. See NIP.

NADIR. Fr. Nadair. In astronomy, an Arabian word (Skinner), signifying the point lying in a direct line—or perpendicularly under our feet, and opposite to the point called the Zenith: though our and other languages may have received the word from the Arabians—as now applied—only to astronomy, the old Goth. Nadr is much older than that science among the northern nations. See NEATH.

The nadire of the son is thilke degre yt is oppoyste to the degree of the son in the xxiiird signe, as thus:—Euery degre of Aries by order is nadire to euery degre of Libra, by order, and Taurus to Scorpion, Gemini to Sagittarius

NAG. Dut. Negge; Ger. Nack. As the Lat. Hinnulus was so called—ab hinniendo, so nag from the A. S. Hnegan, to neigh. Generally—

An animal that neighs; a horse; usually, a horse of small, handy size.

NAIL, n. } Nagel, nageln; Sw. Nagel, nagla;
A. S. Nægl, nægl-an, ge-næglian: the nail of the hand is derived by Skinner and others from the

A. S. Gnæg-an, to gnaw; Skinner assigning as a reason, that they are gnawed by contemplative and uncleanly persons. A nail (sc. of iron) he composes of the Dut. Nae, ad, and the A. S. Ecge, an edge. Wachter has no doubt that they are the same word: the nails of man and animals (he observes)—videntur infixæ tanquam clavi; and the clavus, he is convinced, received its appellation from that part where it ends in a point, and may be infixæ in wood, and this leads him to the Gr. Νύττειν, pungere, fodicare; to pierce, to dig. It is not improbable that the word itself, nægl-ian, signified,—

To fix or fasten, to infix. To nail is now, by usage,—

To drive in a nail, to fix or fasten with nails; to cover with nails; (met.) to fix or fasten, to keep or hold close or tight to.

NAIVELY. Fr. Naïvement. Of Naïveté, the best account is given (says Blair) by a French critic, M. Marmontel, who explains it thus:—That sort of amiable ingenuity or undisguised openness, which seems to give us some degree of superiority over the person who shows it, a certain infantine simplicity, which we have in our hearts, but which displays some features of the character that we think we could have art enough to hide; and which, therefore, always leads us to smile at the person who discovers this character, (Lect. 19.) Naively, used by Pope in one of his early letters, does not seem entitled to this refinement.

She [an old lady with whom Pope and Gay were dining] divided the fish into three parts; not equal, God knows; for she helped Gay to the head, me to the middle, and making the rest much the largest part, took it herself, and cried very naively, I'll be content with my own tail.

NAPLESS. } word as knap, knop, or knob, (qv.)
NAPKIN. } Any thing rising; applied to—
The soft, downy, woolly surface or superficies, of cloth, plant, or other substance.
Napery is applied to the substance itself, (sc.
linen,) having such surface.

Tel me one thing, quoth he, that ye want. One thing (quoth I?) Mary amongst many things that I want, I want naperie.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 995. Dr. Bonner's Declaration.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Wit without Money, Act iii. sc. 1.

That brushing, dressing, nor new naps can mend.
Id. A Wife for a Month, Act ii. sc. 1.

There be also plants, that though they have no prickles, yet they have a kinde of downey or velvet rine, upon their leaves; as rose-campion, stock-gilly-flowers, colts-foot; which downe or nap commeth of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 560.

Our innes are also verie well furnished with naperie,

Appear i' th' market-place, nor on him put
The naps vesture of humilitie.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 1.

NAPPE, or as Skinner writes it, nap of the neck, so called (he thinks) from the downy softness of the hair that grows upon it: Junius derives from the Gr. Nappē, rupes.

She sent an arrow forth with mighty draught,
That in the very dore him over caught,
And, in his nape arriving through it thril'd
His greedy throat.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

As Palamede to scale the bulwarks strove,
In his right eye the fatal arrow drove,
Through all the optic nerves its passage tore,
And issu'd at his nape besmeared with gore.

NARCO'TICK, adj. } Fr. Narcotique; It.
NARCO'TICK, n. } and Sp. Narcotico; Gr.
Narkotikos, from vapko-eiv, to benumb, to stupify.
See the quotation from Holland.

For he had yeven drinke his gayler so
Of a clarre, made of a certain wine,
With narcotikes and opie of Thebes fine,
That all the night through that men wold him shake
The gailer slept, he mighte not awake.
Chaucer. The Knights Tale, v. 1474.

Narcotike medicines, bee those that benum and stupifie

Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 53.

Hee is but a narrator of other men's opinions, suspending his owne judgment, sometime peradventure when hee should not have so done.—Mountagu. App. to Caesar, c. 1.

Now, letters, tho' they be capable of any subject, yet commonly they are either narratory, oburgatory, consolatory, monitory, or congratulatory.—Howell, b. i. s. 1. Let. 1.

Chiefs, who no more in bloody fights engage,
But wise through time, and narrative with age.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

The words of all judicial acts are written narratively unless it be in sentences wherein dispositive and enacting terms are made use of.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

In the narration of the Poet, it is not material, whether he relate the whole story in his own character, or introduce some of his personages to relate any part of the action, that had passed before the poem opens.—Blair, Lect. 42.

Perchance some hackney, hunger-bitten scribler,
Insults thy memory, and blots thy tomb
With long flat narrative, or duller rhymes.—Id. Grave.

So in our streets sly beggers narrowly
Watch motions of the giver's hand or eye,
And evermore conceive some hope thereby.
Donne. Letters. To Mr. T. W.

[Men] should accustome themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their mindes to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their mindes.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 290.

Let him be exact and impartial in the great work of self-examination, looking often and narrowly into the state of his soul, and clearing all accounts and old scores between God and his conscience.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

What virtue is there in a tragedy, which is not contained the nasal duct into the nose every time it is drest, in order to dilate it a little.—Sharpe. Surgery.

Sneezing, masticatories, and nasals are generally received:
Hercules de Saxonie relates of an empirick in Venice that had a strong water to purge by the mouth and nostrils, which he still used in head melancholy, and would sell for no gold.—Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 384.

And some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those four kinds of nasicornous beetles described by Muffetus.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 23.

The liquid nasal follows these, being formed by the tongue and roots of the teeth, with a little assistance from the other organ: and we must particularly remember, when we attend to the pronunciation of Indian dialects, that most sounds of this class are varied in a singular manner by turning the tongue upwards, and almost bending it back towards the palate, so as to exclude them nearly from the order, but not from the analogy, of dentals.
Sir W. Jones. On the Orthography of Asiatick Words.

The Indian sound differs only in the greater nasality of the first letter.—Id. Ib.

NA'SCENT. Lat. Nascens, growing, from nasci, to grow.

Growing, rising, or springing up.

As the soul animates the whole, what nearly touches the Sin is the uncleanness of the soul, that cleaves closer to it, than any outward nastiness can to the skin.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. Case 3.

Many there are who embrace dunghills, the filth and offensiveness of whose lives does exceed them, and who are sordidly and nastily habited, whose clothes are but an emblem of their hearts, and a lively picture of their manners.
South, vol. x. Ser. 1.

The swine is as filthy when he lies close in his sty, as NA'TURE, v. Fr. Nature; It. and Sp. Natura; Lat. Natura, naturalis; Fr. Naturel, naturalizer; It. Naturale, naturalizzare; Sp. Naturalizar; from natum, past part. of nasci; gnasci, Gr. γενναειν, to bear, to cause, to be.

Our English word kind is very emphatically used by our elder writers as equivalent to—nature: according to or against kind, is, according to or against nature; unkind, unnatural.

Nature is very variously applied:—

To the aggregate of qualities inherent from the birth or creation of any thing; forming or constituting its being, essence, or existence; its kind or species.

To the Author or Creator of the world.

To an imaginary being, framed by the personification of the qualities constituting or composing the universal world.

To the established course or order of the phenomena or appearances of the universe.

To the system of animal and material being.

More specifically,—to the sensations or passions of animate beings.

To the sensible qualities of material beings.

Nature is opposed to art.

To naturalize,—to invest with native or natural qualities; to grant the rights or privileges of a native, or one born in a country.

If gentillesse were planted naturally
Unto a certain lineage down the line,
Prive and apert, than wol they never fine
To don of gentillesse the faire office,
They mighten do no vilanie or vice.

Fox. Martyrs, p. 1594. Letters of M. Latimer.

For syth he wrought it not naturallye but willingly, he wrought it not to the vttermost of his power, but with such degrees of goodnes as his hye pleasure lyked to lymit.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 129.

Every man naturally desyreth to go into their owne coütres, and to here therof.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 332.

Nature then (according to the opinion of Aristotle) is the beginning of motion and rest, in that thing wherein it is properly and principally, not by accident: for all things to be seen (which are done neither by fortune nor by necessity, and are not divine, nor have any such efficient cause) are called natural, as having a proper and peculiar nature of their own.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 659.

For there are in nature certain fountains of justice, whence all civil laws are derived but as streams: and like as waters do take tinctures, and tastes from the soils through which they run, so do civil laws vary according to the regions and governments where they are planted, though they proceed from the same fountains.—Bacon. On Learning, b. ii.

It is with depraved man in his impure naturalis, that we must maintaine this quarell.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

So farre as the Spirit of God is above reason, so farre doth a Christian exceed a meere naturalist.

Id. Meditations & Vowes, Cent. 3.

Yea, let mee but know what action Popery requires of any of her followers, which a meere naturalist hath not done, cannot do?—Id. Decad. 3. Epist. 3.

Since [Edward of Caernarvon] perceiv'd us prone Here only to be rul'd by princes of our own,
Our naturalness therein he greatly did approve;
And publicly protests, that for the ancient love
He ever bare to Wales, they all should plainly see That he had found out one, their sovereign lord to be.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

Though they [Spaine] have not had that usage to naturalize liberally; yet they have that, which is next to it: that is, to employ, almost indifferently, all nations in their militia of ordinary souldiers.—Bacon. Ess. Of Kingdomes.

Therefore all States, that are liberrall of naturalization towards strangers, are fit for empire.—Id. Ib.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second, or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity.

Brown. Vulgar Errors.

Our little world, the image of the great,
Like that, amidst the boundless ocean set,
Of her own growth hath all that nature craves,
And all that's rare, as tribute from the waves.

Waller. On a Brede of divers colours.

It is disputed, I know, in natural philosophy, whether the sense being duly qualify'd, and the object as duly proposed, and the medium fitted to both, the sense can be deceived in the apprehension of its object; and it is generally held in the negative.—South, vol. v. Ser. 4.

Naturalists observe that when the frost seizes upon wine they are only the slighter and more waterish parts of it that are subject to be congealed: but still there is a mighty spirit, which can retreat into itself, and there within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression of the element round about it.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 12.

And to show the naturalness of monarchy, all the forms of government insensibly partake of it, and slide into it.

Id. vol. iii. Ser. 12.

But to call the earth the lower part of itself, is an apparent violence to the naturalness of the expression, and indeed not more forced than ridiculous.—Id. vol. vii. Ser. 1.

Those that admit and applaud the vulgar notion of nature, I must here advertise you partly because they do so, and partly for brevity's sake, I shall hereafter many times call naturalists.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 168.

Naturalists have built immense systems of imagination on a few sensible phaenomena inaccurately observed very often, and not always very fairly recorded.

Bolingbroke, Ess. 4. s. 24. Authority in Matters of Religion.

He [Lord Bolingbroke] was of that sect, which to avoid a more odious name, chuses to distinguish itself by that of naturalism; and had boasted in private, what feats he should be able to perform, in the attack he had long threatened on all our metaphysics and theology; in other words on natural and revealed religion.

Hurd. Life of Warburton.

If I succeed in naturalizing to any degree authors, whose names only float amongst us, I shall not think that what has been the heaviest part of my undertaking has been the most unprofitable.—Observer, No. 2.

Toto was afterwards sergeant painter, and in Rymer are his letters of naturalization under this title.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

NA'VELLED. } Naf, nafle. Wachter and Ihre agree, that the word naf, nafa, in almost all languages, eastern and western, means either hollow, or is applied to things that are hollow; and that the navel is also so called from its roundness and concavity.

1333

Nave of the wheel,—the hollow into which the ends of the axle are inserted.

Nave of a church, nef du temple,—the concave centre or body of the church, distinguished from the side aisles or wings. Addison writes nef. Applied (generally) to the centre.

Navel,—the hollow membrane connecting the parent and child.

Your noble confessor, ther God him save,
Shal hold his nose upright under the nave.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7938.

The statue of Venus glorious for to see
Was naked fleting in the large see.
And fro the navel down all covered was
With wawes grene, and bright as any glas.

They would not thred the gates: this kinde of seruice
Did not deserue corne gratis.—Id. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 1.

In describing this riuer, this one thing (right honorable) is come vnto my mind touching the center and navill as it were of England.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 11.

The long nef [of the church of St. Justina in Padua] consists of a row of five cupolas: the cross one has on each side, a single cupola deeper and broader than the others.

Addison. Travels in Italy.

At evening service about six o'clock, the cathedral was illuminated in the finest manner imaginable. Double rows of lustres lighted up the nave.—Eustace. Italy, vol. i. c. 5.

Evelyn objects to the absurdity of representing Adam and Eve with navels, and a fountain with carved imagery in Paradise. The latter remark is just; the former is only worthy of a critical man-midwife.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

Lo, Nemi, navell'd in the woody hills vomit of corruption and naughtinesse.

Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1382.

Chlo. Play by yourself, I dare not venture thither:
You and your naughty pipe go hang together.
Dryden. Theocritus, Idyll. 27.

To death ourselves and all our work we owe:
But is there nought, O Muse, can save
Our memories from darkness and the grave,
And some short after-life bestow.
Hughes. Ode to the Memory of Mrs. Hughes.

Sensation caused by (the motion of) a ship;
sea-sickness; loathing, disgust, squeamishness.

While we single out several dishes and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary, or upon opinion; for many are commended and cryed up in one age, which are decried and nauseated in another.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. iii. c. 25.

Hunger and thirst with patience will we meet,
And what offended nature nauseates, eat.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

The light to him is the shadow of death; he has no heart, nor appetite to business; nay, his very food is nauseous to him, and his daily repast no refreshment.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 3.

— The sun, that in the marshes breeds
Nothing but nauseous and unwholesome weeds,
With the same rays, on rich and pregnant earth,
To pleasant flowers and useful fruits gives birth.
Walsh. The Power of Verse.

Some venal pens so prostitute the bays,
Their panegyricks lash; their satires praise.
So nauseously, and so unlike, they paint,
N—'s an Adonis; M—'r a saint.
Garth. Claremont.

Riches and honours, then, are useless things,
To the ill-judging palate sweet,
But turn at last to nauseousness and gall.
Pomfret. A Prospect of Death.

Temperance itself will take a little [praise], but the stom-

I haue greatly wished there were a lecture of navigation read in this cite, for the banishing of our former grosse ignorance in marine causes, and for the increase and generall multiplying of the sea-knowledge of this age, wherein God hath raised so general a desire in the youth of this realme to discover all parts of the face of the earth, to this realme, in former ages, not known.

The burning line, or dares the wintry pole.
Thomson. Summer.

When by means of it [the mariner's compass] navigators found that at all seasons, and in every place, they could discover the North and South with so much ease and accuracy, it became no longer necessary to depend merely on the light of the stars, and the observation of the sea-coast.
Robertson. America, vol. i. b. i.

By the transformation of the ships into sea-deities, Virgil would insinuate, I suppose, the great advantages of cultivating a naval power, such as extended commerce, and the dominion of the ocean.—Jortin, Dis. 6.

NAY, ad. } from the Lat. Ne; Wachter,—the Dut. and Ger. from the Lat. Non. Tooke has no doubt that they have the same origin and sig-nification as the Dan. Nödeg; Sw. Noodeg; Dut.
Noode, node, and no, which mean averse, unwilling.
Hence,—

To nay will mean,—to be averse or unwilling;
to dissent, to refuse, to deny.
Nay, n.—dissent, refusal, denial.
Nay, ad. is used elliptically—(sc.) as denying what is said to be all that might be said.
See the example from Milton.

Thanne is that body bettere than thow. quath ich.

NAZARITE. One who separates himself; from the Heb. Nazar, separare, segregare. The old translation of the Bible, 1551, uses the word absteyner.

Speake vnto the children of Israel, and say vnto them, when a man or woman doeth separate the selues to vowe a vowe of a Nazarite to separate [himselfe] vnto the Lorde:
He shall absteyne from wine and strög drinke, and shall drinke no sowre wine nor sowre drinke, nor shal drinke anie licour of grapes neither shal eate fresh grappes nor dried.
Geneva Bible, 1561. Numbers, vi. 5.

A Nazarite in place abominable

NEAP, adj. } Skinner says,—that neaps or NEAP, n. } neap tides, are tides—aquarum inopes, (A. S. Næstiq, inops.) tides scant of water.
As a nawl is an awl, a neap may be an ebb; a decreasing tide; decreasing as the moon decreases.
See the quotation from Maclaurin.

The waters are in perpetual agitation of flux and refluxes:
even when no wind stirs, they have their neap and spring tides.—Bp. Hall. Ser. Lent 1641.

Her [the sea] motion of ebbing and flowing, of high springs and dead neapes, are still as certaine and constant, as the changes of the moone and course of the sunne.
Hakewill. Apologie, b. ii. c. 8. s. 1.

The action of the sun diminishes the effect of the moon's action in the quarters, because the one raises the water in that case where the other depresses it: and therefore the tides then are least: and these we call the neap tides.

NECESSITY. } non potest; (ἀναστροφή, incessabile,—Martinius,) that which cannot cease, stop, or be stopped. Necessary and necessity are thus negative terms; the former is used as equivalent to—

Needful or compulsive; unavoidable or inevitable, or that cannot be shunned or escaped; irresistible, resistless, or that cannot be stood up against, supported, or opposed; indispensable, or that cannot be set apart or aside, cannot be done without; also to—needful or requisite. And thus, necessaries are things requisite or required for particular objects or purposes; that are wanted, or must be had or used for the fulfilment of those purposes. And—

Necessitous, wanting or not having such neces- saries or things needful or requisite; needy, poor.

Therefore I gesside necessarie to preie britherin that thei

To inquire which thing cause of which thing be,
As whether that the prescience of God is
The certaine cause of the necessite
Of things that to comen be parre,
Or if necessitie of thing comming.
Be cause certaine of the purveying.
But now ne enforce I me not in showing,
How the order of the causes stant, but well wot I
That it behoueth, that the befalling

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

The Anaximandrian atheist plainly discovers, that when the Democriticks and Atomicks have spent all their fury against these qualities and forms, and done what they can to salve the phenomena of nature without them another way, themselves do notwithstanding like drunken men reel and stagger back again into them, and are unavoidably necessitated at last, to take up their sanctuary in them.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 143.

This renders his Poems more animated but less grave and majestic, and consequently necessitates the frequent use of a lower style.—Pope. Odyssey, Post.

I have one thing to observe of them [the several kinds of necessity] that the idea of some sort of firm connection runs through them all: and that is the proper general import of the name—necessity. Connection of mental or verbal propositions, or of their respective parts, makes up the idea of logical necessity—connection of end and means makes up the idea of moral necessity. Connection of causes and effects is physical necessity. And connection of existence and essence is metaphysical necessity.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 432.

But free from necessitation, I say, no man can be, and
'tis that which his lordship undertook to disprove.
Hobbs. Of Liberty & Necessity.

They who were envied, found no satisfaction in what they relling.—Burnet. Theory of the Earth.

For strong necessity our toil demands,
Claims all our hearts, and urges all our hands.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

The only way that any thing that is to come to pass hereafter, is or can be necessary, is by a connection with something that is necessary in its own nature, or something that already is or has been: so that the one being supposed, the other certainly follows.—Edwards. On the Will, pt. i. s. 3.

But here follows the mischief: when once fashion hath annexed the use of these articles of dress to any certain class, the middling ranks, for example, of the community, each individual of that rank finds them to be necessities of life; that is, finds himself obliged to comply with the example of his equals, and to maintain that appearance which the custom of society requires.

Paley. Moral Philosophy, b. vi. c. 11.

The only question in dispute between the advocates for philosophical liberty and the necessarians, is this: whether volition can take place independently of motive?

Belsham. Philosophy of the Mind, c. 9. s. 1.

And the contrary to liberty, whatever name we call that by, is a person's being hindered or unable to conduct as he will, or being necessitated to do otherwise.

Edwards. On the Will, pt. i. s. 5.

Philosophical necessity is really nothing else than the full and fixed connection between the things signified by the subject and predicate of a proposition, which affirms something to be true.—Id. Ib. s. 3.

NECK. } A. S. Hnecca, necca; Dut. Nek; Ger. Nache; Sw. Nache, which latter Serenius derives from ancient hnig-a, to bend, modern nicka, to nod. Wachter tells us that some derive the German from Neig-en, inclinare, to bend. And in Kilian we find Dut. Neck, nich, cervix; nich, nutus; nicken, nuere, nutare, to nod, to bend the neck.

Tooke thinks the A. S. Hnecc may perhaps also be the past tense hnig-an, to bow, to bend, to incline. See KNEE, KNUCKLE, NOD.

And then the whole quire hold their hipps and losse,
And waxen in their mirth, and neez, and sweare
A merrier houre was neuer wasted there.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act ii. sc. 1.

NEF, of a church. See NAVE.

NEFANDOUS. Lat. Nefandum, that ought not to be spoken, fari; too impious, too wicked, to be told.

The Press restrain'd I nefandous thought!
In vain our sires have nobly fought:
While free from force the press remains,
Virtue and Freedom cheer our plains,
And Learning largesses bestows,
And keeps uncensur'd open house.—Green. The Spleen.

NEFARIOUS. } Lat. Nefarius, from ne, and NEFARIOUSLY. } fari, not to be spoken: too bad to be spoken or told; and, consequentially,— Extremely or excessively wicked; infamous.

So we plant glory and renown,
Where it was ne'er deserv'd nor known,
But to worse purpose, many times,
To flourish o'er nefarious crimes,
And cheat the world.—Buller. To the Memory of Duval.

The author of the said Way to Bliss [Ashmole] thus totally, thus nefariously rob'd and despoiled of his honour, did therefore publish the perfect copy.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. p. 891

If there are slaves to pity blind,
With power enough to plague mankind,
That for their own nefarious ends,
Tread upon Freedom and her friends,
Let 'em beware the Witch's fate!—Cunningham. Witch.

NEGATION. } Fr. Négation, negatif; It.

NEGATIVE, n. } gacion, negativa; Lat. Negatio, NEGATIVE, v. } from negare; (ne-go quasi NEGATIVELY. } ne-ago,—Vossius;)—to say no or not; to deny, to refuse. Negation,— A denial or refusal; a saying or declaring that a thing, shall not be, is not or has not been.
See the quotations from Locke and Watts.

Other badness no beyng hath vtterlie, it is in the negative of somewhat, and that is naughte, and nothinge beyng.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

But the negatife hereof in badness is holden, as the lady of loue hath me learned, who so aright in this booke loketh.
Id. Ib. b. iii.

But I founde therein no answeare appoynted to be made to them whyche receyued that ordre, neyther by affyrmacion nor yet negation.—Bale. Apologie, p. 23.

For where in the secōd booke of his worke, entretyng transubstantiation, he would the same words of Chrisostome by this fourme of speache in the negative should not denye precisely.—Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of the Presence, fol. 68.

So I saie againe, that I weigh not two chips which way the wind bloweth, because I see no inconuenience that may insue either of the affirmatiue or negative opinion.
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 2.

My wife is slipperie? If thou wilt, confesse.
Or else be impudently negative,
To haue nor eyes, nor eares, nor thought; then say
My wife's a hobby-horse.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

We will not say (as you are wont) argue from Scriptures negatively.—Bp. Hall. Apologie against Brownists, s. 20.

We haue negative names, which stand not directly for positive ideas, but for their absence, such as insipid, silence, nihil, &c. which words denote positive ideas; v. g. taste,
sound, being, with a signification of their absence.
Locke. Of Humane Understanding, b. ii. c. 8.

It is disputed, I know, in Natural Philosophy, whether the sense being duly qualify'd, and the object as duly proposed, and the medium fitted to both, the sense can be deceived in the apprehension of its object; and it is generally held in the negative.—South, vol. v. Ser. 4.

For the words speak negatively, yet this is a known rule in divinity that there is no command that runs in the strain of negatives, but couches under it a positive duty.
Id. vol. viii. Ser. 7.

Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate or blind or deaf, that is, has no life, nor sight, nor hearing; nor when we say, a carpenter or a fisherman is unlearned, these are mere negations.
Watts. Logick, pt. i. c. 2. § 6.

It is not like alledging a new law of Nature, or a new experiment in Natural Philosophy, because when these are related, it is expected that under the same circumstances the same effect will follow universally; and in proportion as this expectation is justly entertained, the want of a corresponding experience negatives the history.
Paley. Evidences, vol. i. Preparatory Considerations.

Mr. Sheridan on the 4th of March, 1793, moved that the House should resolve itself into a Committee, to consider of the seditious practices, &c. referred to in his Majesty's Speech, declaring at the same time openly and freely that his intention was to constitute a rigorous enquiry into the truth of the reports so insidiously circulated. The motion of Mr. Sheridan was negatived without a division.
Belsham. History of Gt. Britain. Geo. III. an. 1793.

So in the very act of refusal, the mind chuses the absence of the thing refused; the positive and the negative are set before the mind for its choice, and it chuses the negative.
Edwards. On the Freedom of the Will, pt. i. s. 1.

As for fastyng, prayer, & such other thynges, he taught them to neglecte and set at naught as wayne & vnfruitful ceremonies.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 257.

And then because it should not be neglect or left undone, an higher officer, as the Archdeacon, came about from parish to parishes at tymes conuenient.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 276.

And now, if he be of God accursed, y^t negligently doth his worke, how much is he more accursed that casteth his work away and leueth it quite vndone, such worke, I say, as thei be bounde to do?—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 208.

That night the legion remoued, fires being left here and there negligently vnput out, part of Turin was burnt.
Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 84.

Thus said, he turn'd, and Satan bowing low,
As to superiour Spirits is wont in Heaven,
Where honour due and reverence none neglects, Took leave.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

But O, my virgin lady, where is she?
How chance she is not in your company?
E. B. To tell thee sadly, shepherd, without blame,
Or our neglect, we lost her as we came. Id. Comus.

I then all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
(To be so pestered with a poppingay,)
Out of my greefe, and my impatience, Answer'd, neglectingly, I know not what;
He should, or should not.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 3.

And this neglection of degree, is it
That by a pace goes backward in a purpose
It hath to climbe. Id. Troil. & Cres. Act i. sc. 3.

It is not for us to affect too much cheapness and neglective homeliness in our evangelical devotions.
Bp. Hall. Holy Decency in the Worship of God.

As he who having found great treasury,
The first year offers with most grateful cheer,
A sheep of gold to Juno's deity;
And next of silver, for a second year:
The third of brass; and then neglectively
Nothing at all. Daniel. Civil War, b. viii.

O negligent and heedlesse discipline,
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 2.

This paper has vndone me, 'tis th' accompt
Of all that world of wealth I haue drawne together
For mine own ends, indeed to gain the Popedome,
And see my friends in Rome, O negligence
Fit for a foole to fall by.—Id. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

But Christianity has backed all its precepts with eternal life and eternal death to the performers or neglectors of them; whereas philosophy could do nothing, but by taking in the assistance of fabulous stories, or by telling men that virtue was a sufficient reward to itself.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

Thy absent spouse, neglectful of thy charms,
Prefers his barbarous Sintians to thy arms!
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

Britain! whose genius is in verse express'd,
Bold and sublime, but negligently dress'd.
Waller. Upon the Earl of Roscommon.

His lovely daughter, lovelier in her tears,
The fond companion of his helpless years,
Silent went next, neglectful of her charms,
And left a lover's for her father's arms.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

To be employed, occupied, busy; to manage or conduct business, to traffic; to manage or conduct a treaty; to treat.

For certaine it is, shee was a busie negotiating woman.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 21.

Finding how nearly it concern'd the State,
To stay a war both dang'rous and unjust;
That weighty bus'ness to negotiate,
They must find one of special worth and trust.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. iii.

Ambassadors, negotiants, and generally, all other ministers of mean fortune, in conversation with princes and superiours, must use great respect.

Ralegh. Arts of Empire, c. 25.

In all negociations of difficultie, a man may not look, to sowe and reape at once; but must prepare businesse, and so ripen it by degrees.—Bacon. Ess. Of Negotiating.

And were this possible, yet would such infinite negotiosity be very vnease and distractious to it, and altogether inconsistent with happiness.—Cudworth. Intel. System, p. 884.

Those who have defended the proceedings of our negotiators at the Treaty of Gertruydenburgh, dwell very much upon their zeal and patience in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands; but they say nothing to justify those demands, or the probability that France would ever accept them.—Swift. The Conduct of the Allies.

He that negociates between God and man,
As God's ambassador, the grand concerns
Of judgment and of mercy, should beware
Of lightness in his speech. Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Greatly superior to the gross ideas of Gothic conquest, he addressed himself to the reason and the interests of those with whom he negotiated.

Mickle. History of the Portuguese Empire in Asia.

A negotiator must often seem willing to hazard the whole issue of his treaty, if he wishes to secure any one material point.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

NE/GRO. Fr. Negré; It. and Sp. Negro; Lat. Niger.

We see also, that the negroes are bred in countries that have plenty of water, by rivers or otherwise: for Meroe, which was the metropolis of Ethiopia, was upon a great lake: and Congo, where the negroes are, is full of rivers. And the confines of the river Niger, where the negroes also are, are well watered.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 399.

Clo. Give me your neafe, Monsieur Mustardseed.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iv. sc. 1.

Tuc. I wu' not, my good two-penny rascal: reach mee thy neufe. Do'st heare?—B. Jonson. Poelaster, Act iii. sc. 4.

NEIFE, n. The quotation explains the origin and meaning of the word.

The children of villeins were also in the same state of bondage with their parents; whence they were called in Latin, nativi, which gave rise to the female appellation of a villein, who was called a neife.—Blackstone. Com. b. ii. c. 6.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 5.

Const. Hearke how our steedes, for present seruice neigh.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 2.

Steed threatens steed, in high and bostful neighs
Piercing the night's dull eare. Id. Ib. Ch. 4.

When now the sprightly trumpet, from afar
Had given the signal of approaching war,
Had rous'd the neighing steeds to scour the fields,
While the fierce riders clatter'd on their shields.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. viii.

The coursers neigh, the clanging arms resound,

And since so neighbour'd to his youth and humour,
That you vouchsafe your rest here in our Court
Some little time. Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

Who being neighbourly admitted by the courtesy of England to hold possessions in our province, a country better than their own, have proved ingrateful and treacherous guests to their best friends and entertainers.
Milton. Observations on the Articles of Peace.

It is I, who by slighting and slubbering over her holy service and sacraments, have scandalized and cast a stumbling-block before all the neighbourhood, to the great danger of their souls.—South, vol. v. Ser. 12.

While from the neighbouring rock, with rural songs,
The pruner's voice the pleasing dream prolongs.
Dryden. Virgil. Past. 1.

There is a law of neighbourhood which does not leave a man perfectly master on his own ground. When a neighbour sees a new erection, in the nature of a nuisance, set up at his door, he has a right to represent it to the judge; who on his part has a right to order the work to be staid; or if established, to be removed.—Burke. On a Reg. Peace, Let. 1.

NEITHER. } A. S. Nather, nouther, from NEOLOGICAL. } word. Fr. Néologie.

A new word; coining, introducing, using new words.

They endeavour by a sort of neology of their own to confound all ideas of right and wrong.

Boothby on Burke, p. 266.

I seriously advise him [Dr. Johnson] to publish by way of appendix to his great work, a genteel neological dictionary, containing those polite, though perhaps not strictly grammatical, words and phrases, commonly used, and sometimes understood, by the beau monde.

Chesterfield. The World, No. 32.

NEOMENY. Fr. Néoménie. Neomenia, used by the Latin fathers. Nea μηνη, the new moon.

Therefore no man iuge ghou in mete or in drynke or in part of feest dai or of neomenye or of sabotis whiche ben schadowe of thingis to comynge, for the bodi is of Crist.

Wiclif. Col. c. 2.

NEOPHYTE. Fr. Néophyte; It. Neòfito; Sp. Neophyto; Lat. Neophytus; Gr. Νεοφυτος, neos, new, and φυτον, from φύειν, to bear.

One newly implanted, (sc.) in the church; and consequentially, newly converted to the christian faith; one newly initiated, newly introduced or employed.

Nay in effects of grace, which exceed far the effects of nature, we see St. Paul makes a difference between those he calls neophytes, that is, newly grafted into Christianity, and those that are brought up in the faith.

Bacon. On the Union of Laws.

There stands a neophyte glazing of his face,
Pruning his clothes, perfuming of his haire
Against his idoll enters; and repeats
(Like an unperfect prologue, at third musick)
His part of speeches, and confederate jests,
In passion to himself.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act iii. sc. 4.

It is with your young grammatical courtier, as with your neophyte player, a thing usual to be daunted at the first presence or interview.—Id. Ib.

NEOTE/RICK. } Gr. Νεωτερικος; from νεω- NEOTE/RICAL. } τερος, comp. of neos, new.
New, novel, modern; of the present time, or time not long past.

That the heavens are void of corruption, is Aristotle's supposal: but the tube hath betray'd their impurity; the neoterick astronomy hath found spots in the sun.

Glauvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 18.

I refer you to the voluminous tomes of Galen, Aretæus, Rhasis, Avicenna, Alexander, Paulus, Ætius, Gordonius, Gulianerius: and those exact neotericks, Savonarola, Capi-vaccius, &c.—Burlon. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 7.

Galen reckons up these ordinary symptoms, which all the neotericks repeat of Diocles.—Id. Ib. p. 199.

I will say this, that whosoever crieth it down for a new neoterical opinion, as divers do, commit a grosser error than the opinion may be in its own nature.—Howell, b. iii. Let. 9.

NE'PHEW. A. S. Nef, new; Fr. Nepveu, neveu; It. Nipote; Sp. Nieto: all, says Skinner, from the Lat. Nepos. Junius derives from νηπιος, infans, one who cannot speak. In our old writers it is applied to—

Grandsons; issue or descendants generally; now restricted to the sons of a brother or sister.

Tho the messenger wyth the tyding to Kyng Howwel com,
Hys conseyll wel hastelyche in such nede he nome;
Vor to helpe ys neueu, and ys kynedom.

R. Gloucester, p. 169.

So that to the lasse Brutayne myd thys sorwe he com,
To the kynges neueu Salomon.

Id. p. 253.

My brother delyuer thou me, my neuw thou me grante.

R. Brunne, p. 69.

And whanne thine husbond is to bed go,
While that he slepeth cut his throte atwo
For in my dreame it is warned me,
How that my neuewe shall my bane be.

Chaucer. The Legend of Hypermestre.

The king being not a litle abasshed with this interpreta-tion, married his daughter neyther to a nobleman, nor to one of his owne countrye, least the nobilitie of the parentes should aduauce & encourage his nephewe to take much upon him.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 2.

The question standeth in thys whyther the olde holy doc-tours and saynets whom we call ye fathers, be better to be beleued in the construction and the vnderstanding of Chryst and hys apostles and ye olde prophets to, whom we be con-tent yt that these men cal graundfathers & great graud-fathers to, or els these yong new naughty nephewes.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 638.

Their eldest sonnes also that succeeded them, were called Jous; and their nephews, or sonnes sonnes, which reigned in the third place, Hercules.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 9.

This people's vertue yet so fruitful was,
Of vertuous nephewes, that posteritie,
Striving in power their grandfathers to passe,
The lowest earth ioind to the heaven hie.

Spenser. The Ruines of Rome.

All that believe the Bible must necessarily derive from Noah; but for the rest of the world, they think little of his sons or nephews.—Locke. Of Government, s. 141.

The uncle is certainly nearer of kin to the common stock by one degree than the nephew; though the nephew, by represent-ing his father, has in him the right of primogeniture.

Berkeley. Siris, s. 62.

NE/POTISM. Fr. Népotisme, from the Lat. Nepos. Applied in Addison as in French, to the corrupt promotion of nephews by the reigning pope.

Yet it is to this humour of nepotism that Rome owes its present splendour and magnificence, for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures, statues, and the like ornaments, had not the riches of the people at several times fallen into the hands of many different families, and parti-cular persons.—Addison. Italy.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

He led me on to mightiest deeds
Above the nerve of mortal arm
Against the uncircumcis'd, our enemies.

Id. Samson Agonistes.

— For bold Hippothous, (Lethus, Pelasgus famous sonne) was so adventurous
That he would stand to bore the corse about the ankle bone,
Where all the nervey fivers meet, and ligaments in one.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Thy nimble Satyrs too, and every straine
(With nervey strength) that issued from thy braine,
Will lose the glory of their own cleare bayes,
If they admit of any other's praise.

Wilson. Elegy upon Donne.

It quite dispirits Religion, by placing it in languid, abor-tive velleities, and so cuts the nerves of all endeavour, by rating glory at a bare desire, and eternity at a wish.

South, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

There sunk Thalia nerveless, cold, and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

Nor hands alone the missile deaths supply,
From nervous cross-bow whistling arrows fly.

Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

His pencil [Peter Angelis] was easy, bright, and flowing,
but his colouring too faint, and nerveless.

Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

He [Marston] thus nervously describes the strength of custom.—Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. iv. s. 47.

1339

If there had been epithets joined with the other sub-stantives, it would have weakened the nervousness of the sentence.—Dr. J. Warton. Essay on Pope.

NE/SCIENCE. From Lat. Nesciens, present part. of nescire, not to know, to be ignorant. Ignorance; want of knowledge or science.

But many of the most accomplisht wits of all ages, whose modesty would not allow them to boast of more than they were owners of, have resolv'd their knowledge into Socrates his summe total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a profest nescience.

Glauvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 2.

But God fetcht it about for me, in that absence and nescience of mine.—Bp. Hall. Specialities of his Life.

NESH. Still common in various parts of England. A. S. Nesc, hnesc, mollis, from ahnescian, hnesc-ian, emollire, to soften.

Soft, tender, delicate.

In all this nesch & hard, euer lasted the distance
Bitwex Kyng Edward, & the Kyng of France.

R. Brunne, p. 302.

A letter this sole tok, bad him for nessh or hard,
Theron suld no man loke. bot only Sir Edward.—Id. p. 228.

— Mine herte for joy doth bete
Him to behold, so is he goodly fresh:

It seemeth for loue his herte is tender and nesch.

Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

He was to nesshe, and she to harde.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Some beat them coates of brasse, or sturdy brest plate hard they driue,
And some their gauntlets gilde, or boots with siluer nesch contrive.

Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vii.

The poore man receyued it thankfully, and sodaynly vanysshed from his syght, so yt no step of hym was seen in the nesshe fenne or moore that he passed thorough.

Fabyan, c. 172.

NESS, ter. A. S. Nes, nesse, nys, nysse. The same word as Ness, a promontory (qv.); perhaps from the verb, Nes-an, neos-an, visere; meaning—any thing seen; evident, conspicuous; and hence, prominent, projecting. Wallis observes—"Ex concretis adjectivis, fiunt substantiva abstracta, addita terminatione ness, as white, white-ness." It corresponds, he adds, to the Ger. Heyt; Eng. Head or nood. (See Hoop.) Wilkins adds this ter. hess, to better, and worse,—betterness, worseness. Discretion is the only guide in the construction of such words. Many have recently been introduced, and are now current both in speech and writing, which will undoubtedly stand the test of time:—others will not.

NESS. A. S. Nase, ness. A promontory or cape, a ness, nose or point of land, lying or shooting out into the sea, (Somner.) See Nose; and Ness, ante.

And about six of the clock at night, the wind vered to the South-West: and we weighed anker, and bare cleere of the ness, and then set our course North-East & by North untill midnight, being then clear of Yarmouth sands.

NE'STLING, n. } make a nest; whence happily our nestle and nestling, for a busy bestirring, as a bird in making or building her nest, (Somner.) Tooke considers nest to be the past part. of the A. S. Nesan, neos-ian, to visit, to visit frequently, to haunt.

A nest,—the haunt, the abode, the residence, place of rest; applied especially to the bed of birds, in which they breed; a snug, well-protected abode.

— In eche rocke ther ys
In tyme of gere an erne's nest.

R. Gloucester, p. 177.

Briddes ich by heelde. in bossches maden neestes.

Piers Plouhman, p. 223.

And Jhesus seyde to him, foxis han dennes, and briddes of the eyr han nestis; but mannes sone hath not where he reste his heed.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 9.

Jesus sayde vnto him: foxes haue holes, and byrdes of the ayre haue neestes; but the sonne of man hath not where on to lay hys head.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And the birdes nestled in hire branches and thinges lying were fed of that tree.—Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 4.

Not farre away, not meete for any guest,
They spide a little cottage, like some poor man's nest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

— For now began
Night with her sullen wings to double-shade
The desert, fowls in their clay nests were couch't,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

The Picts, which before inhabited within the Isles of Orkenie, now placed themselves in the North parts of Scotland, and after by process of time came and nestled themselves in Louthian, in the Mers, and other countries more neere to our borders.—Holinshed. Hist. of Eng. b. iv. c. 32.

Let second brothers and poore nestlings,
Whom more injurious Nature later brings
Into the naked world; let them assaine
To get hard penny-worths with so bootlesse paine.
Hall, b. iii. Sat. 2.

The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flickering on her nest made short essays to sing.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

A doctrine fit only to come from him, who nested himself into the chief power of Geneva after the expulsion of the lawful Prince.—South, vol. v. Ser. 5.

They have seen perjury and murder nestle themselves into a throne, live triumphant, and die peaceably.
Id. vol. iv. Ser. 4.

He found him mounted, in his pew,
With books and money plac'd for shew,
Like nest-eggs to make clients lay,
And for the false opinion pay.
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

I have educated nestling linnets under the three best singing larks; the skylark, the woodlark, and titlark, every one of which, instead of the linnet's song, adhered entirely to that of their respective instructors, Barrington. Experiments on Singing Birds.

What the nestling is not thoroughly master of, he hurries over, lowering his tone, as if he did not wish to be heard, and could not yet satisfy himself.—Id. Ib

But as a birde, whiche wol alight,
And seeth the meate, but not the nette.
Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

— Virgin majesty with mild
And sweet allay'd, yet terrible to approach,
Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them tangl'd in amorous nets.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

This may well seeme a marveile incredible to those who neither knew nor saw the net-work, habergeon, or curet of Amasis, a king some time of Egypt, which was shewed of late daies within the temple of Minerva, in the Isle of the Rhodians; every thred whereof carried a twist three hundred and sixtie-five double.—Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

This reticulate or net-work was also considerable in the inward parts of man, not onely from the first sublegmen, or warp of his formation, but in the netty fibres of the veines and vessels of life.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

And nets of various sorts, and various snares,
The seine, the cast-net, and the wicker maze,
To waste the watery tribes a thousand ways.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

A freeman, being born of the slaves enfranchised, and being ready to be thrown down the rock Tarpeian, because he had saved and hidden one of the outlaws and men proclaimed to be put to death wheresoever they were found, cast in Sylla's teeth, how they had lived and dwelt together a long time in one self-house, he having payed a thousand nummos for the rent of the uppermost rooms of the same house, and Sylla, three thousand for all the neathermost rooms.—North. Plutarch, p. 386.

First, let avenging Jove, with flames from high,
Drive down this body to the nether sky,
Condemn'd with ghosts in endless night to lie,
Before I break the plighted faith I gave.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

How deep yon azure dyes the sky!

Chaucer. The House of Fame, b. iii.

— Now drew they nigh

The western point, where those half-rounding guards,
Just met, and closing stood in squadron join'd Awaiting next command.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There the companions of his fall, orewhelm'd
With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,
He soon discerns, and weltring by his side
One next himself in power, and next in crime,
Long after known in Palestine, and nam'd Beelzebub.

Friend, parent, neighbour, first it will embrace;
His Country next, and next all human race.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 4.

It should be considered what is the next and immediate object of the will, with respect to a man's walking, or any other external action.

Edwards. On the Freedom of the Will, pt. i. s. 1.

The thing nextly chosen or preferred when a man wills to walk, is not his being removed to such a place where he would be, but such an exertion and motion of his legs and feet, &c. in order to it.—Id. Ib.

B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act i. sc. 6.

NIB, n. A.S. Nebbe, the bill, beak, or NIBBLE, v. nib of a bird, (Somner.) Nib, or NIBBLE, n. neb, is nip, (qv.) by the change NIBBLER. of p into b; and nibble, the diminutive, to nip gently or slightly, so as not to hold fast; to bite by small nips; to bite at timorously or cautiously.

To nib, (sc.) a pen, is to nip off the point; cut it off.

Leo. How she holds up the neb, the byll to him!

Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

Put water into the bottome of a stillatory with the neb

I fear the souldiers, for they look as if They would be nibbling too.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The False One, Act v. sc. 4.

Even ours at home can nibble at these (as they think) ill placed honours and services.

Bp. Hall. Episcopacy by Divine Right, pt. iii. s. 8.

The tender nibbler would not touch the bait,
But smile and jest at every gentle offer.

Shakespeare. The Passionate Pilgrim, s. 2.

With thee, where bearded goats descend the steep,
Or where, like winter's snow, the nibbling sheep
Clothe the slope hills, I'll pass the cheerful day.

Gay. Dione, Act iv. sc. 4.

Then earth's inhabitants, the nibblers, shake,
And frogs, the dwellers in the waters, quake.

Johnson. Life of Waller.

NICHE. It. Nicchia; Fr. "Niche,"—a hollow seat, or standing for a statue or image, made
(i. e. cut) into a wall." (Cotgrave.)

It is probably a nick, or nook, from the verb nick, to cut into; and usually applied as Cotgrave explains.

That the nices, if they contain figures of white stone or marble, be not coloured in their concavity too blacke.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 61.

On the other side of Naples are the catacombs. These must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches, as an eminent author of our own country imagines.

Addison. Italy.

Gothic tombs owed their chief grandeur to rich canopies, fretwork, and abundance of small niches and trifling figures.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 5.

NICK, v. } Junius refers to the Dut. Nicken, NICK, n. } nictare oculis; and Skinner, to the NICKER. } Ger. Nick, a nod. The word is used in English, as equivalent to the Lat. Incidere, to cut into.

To cut into; to cut a notch or hollow into;
(sc.) into one thing to suit the reception of another; to make a suitable or convenient incision; to nick or do any thing in the nick; i. e. at a fitting time, suitably, conveniently, opportunely, seasonably; at the right moment, at a lucky moment.

To nick is, also,—to cut a notch in a tally, by way of reckoning or keeping account; and thus, out of all nick, is out of reckoning; and to nick, is to cheat, (by cutting a notch fraudulently,) to impose upon, to play a trick of delusion or mockery: and hence, perhaps, to nick-name, (qv.)

— And the while
His man with cizars nicks him like a foole.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act v. sc. 1.

Ho. I tell you what Launce his man told me,
He lou'd her out of all nicke.
Id. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 2.

Will. Think how to nick him home, thou knowest she dotes on thee.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Little Thief, Act i. sc. 1.

— Why should he follow?
The itch of his affection should not then Haue nickt his captain ship at a point
When halfe to halfe the world oppos'd, he being
The meered question?
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11.

Schol. Does the sea stagger ye?
Mast. Now ye have hit the nick.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 6.

God delivered them at the very nick of time, when they were but one remove, one hair's breadth from destruction.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 4.

His scatter'd pence the flying nicker flings,
And with the copper shower the casement rings.
Gay. Trivia, b. iii.

NICK, (Old.) In Dutch, says Wachter, Nicker is the devil; and the name seems derived from the A. S. Næc-an, to slay; for the devil was a manslayer from the beginning.

"Nicka was the Gothic demon, who inhabited the element of the water, and who strangled persons that were drowning," (Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, Diss. 1;) and from him the name has been transferred, with the epithet "old," to the devil of the christian theology. Butler gives Machiavel the credit of conferring the cognomen.

It is enough (quoth he) for once,
And has repriv'd thy forfeit bones:
Nick Machiavel had ne'er a trick,
(Though he gave his name to our Old Nick),
But was below the least of these,
That pass i' th' world for holiness.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

NICK-NAME, v. } Junius imagines,—from NICK-NAME, n. } nom de nique, an expression borrowed from the Italians, who use not only iniquo, but niquo. But see NICK.

To impose a name in mockery or jest; from some real or imputed characteristic, or some act of the party.

Tiberius Nero propter nimiam vini aviditatem, saith Suetonius, by reason of his excessive drinking, was nick-named Biberius Mero.—Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. c. 6. s. 5.

Others auouch, and that more truelie, that he [Johannes Duns Scotus] was borne in Downe, an old ancient ciuitie in the north of Ireland, and thereof they ghesse him to be named Dunensis, and by contraction Duns, which terme is so triuiall and common in all schools, that whoso surpasseth others either in cauilling, sophistrie, or subtil philosophie, is forthwith nicke-named a Duns.

Holinshead. Description of Ireland, c. 1.

For my mortale enemie hath falsely surmised me to be a fayned person giuing mee nicknames, so abusing the world.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 151.

From nicknames, or nursenames, came these (pardon me for William, Clem for Clement, Nat for Nathaniel, Mab for Abraham, &c.—Camden. Remaines. Surnames.

And, instructed in the art of display, they utter with an air of plausibility this jargon, which they nick-name metaphysics.—Dr. Whitby. Five Points, Advertisement.

NICO'TIAN, n. } Fr. "Nicotiane"; It. Nico- NICO'TIAN, adj. } tiana; Sp. Nicociana. Tobacco, (first sent into France by Nicot (the maker of the great French Dictionary) in the year 1560, when he was Ambassador Leiger in Portugal.)— Cotgrave.

And for your green wound, your Balsamum and your St. John's wort are all mear gulleries and trash to it, especially your Trinidad: your Nicotian is good too.

B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iii. s. 5.

What shall I say more? this gourmand sacrifices whole hecatombs to his paunch, and whiffes himselfe away in Nicotian incense to the idol of his vaine intemperance.
Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

NICTATE, v. } Lat. Nictare, to wink.
NICTATION. } Vossius,—from the ancient NICTITATE, v. } nivere, still remaining in the compound convivere.

To wink, to move the eye-lid quickly up and down.

Neither is it to be esteemed any defect or imperfection in the eyes of man that they want the seventh muscle, or the nictating membrane, which the eyes of many other animals are furnished withal; for though they be very useful, and in a manner necessary to them, considering their manner of living, yet they are not to man.—Ray. Creation, pt. ii.

Not only our nictations for the most part when we are awake, but also our nocturnal volutions in sleep, are performed with very little or no consciousness.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 161.

To the eye-lids we may add another guard afforded the eyes of most quadrupedes, birds, and fishes, by the nicti- tating membrane.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2. Note 34.

NIDIFICATION. } Lat. Nidificatio, from NIDULATION. } Nidificare, i. e. Nidum fa- cere, to make, to build a nest. Gr. Neoros, νεοros, from neos, young.

The making or building of a nest.

And yet there is a great affinity betwixt the nidifications of birds and these conglomerations of the threads of the silk-worm.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. iii. c. 13.

And so for insects, those little weak, those tender creatures; yet what admirable artists are they in this business of nidification.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 13.

The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the vertue prognostick of these birds, [king fisher:] the natural regard they have unto the winds and they unto them again, more especially remarkable in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 10.

NIDING. } A. S. Nithing; Sw. Niding. In NIDGET. } Fr. Nigaud, nigaur, are explained by Cotgrave, a nidget, a fop, an idiot; the verb niger, to play the nidget or fop, to trifle, from the Lat. Nugari, (Menage.) Spelman and Skinner have also niderling, or nidering, which the former would derive from the Anglo-Norman Nid, a nest, and ling, a chicken; q. d. a chicken that dare not leave his nest. The latter from nether, lower, q. d.
A low, base, worthless fellow.

But there was one true English word of as great, if not greater force than them all, now out of al use, and will be thought for sound barbarous; but therefore of more efficacie (as it pleaseth Porphyrie) and in signification it signifieth as it seemeth, no more than abiect, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Yet it hath levied armies, and subdued rebellious enemies; and that I may holde you no longer, it is niding. [See Nothing in Junius.]

Camden. Remaines. Languages.

NIDOUR. } Lat. Nidor; Fr. Nideur, nido- NIDOROSE. } reux. The Lat. Nidor, properly, NIDOROUS. } says Vossius, is the smell or odour of esculents, and sometimes of other things; perhaps from the Gr. Κύρα. Cotgrave calls the Fr.
Nideur,—"the stench or fulsome savour of things broiled or burnt," and in English it is applied to the scent of meats dressed or dressing.

When the flesh-pots reek and the uncovered dishes send forth a nidor and hungry smells; that cloud hides the face and puts out the eye of reason.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Incense and nidorous smels (such as were of sacrifices) were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion: which they may do by a kind of sadness and con-tristation of the spirits; and partly also by heating, and exalting them.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 932.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are pains in the stomach many hours after repast, eructations either with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidorose, or foetid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs, &c.
Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 1. s. 6.

NIECE. Fr. Nièce, and niece; It. Nezza; in A. S. Nift, which bears a manifest resemblance to nefa, a nephew; in Dut. Nichte is cognata, neptis; in Ger. Nift, nichte; and in Goth. Nithyis is cognatus, akin; and it is probable that the word has an origin in some term signifying generally, (nigh-ness, near-ness,) proximity, near relationship. The etymologists, in general, refer it to the Lat. Neptis. It is now applied to—
The daughter of a brother or sister.

Seynt Edward's nece, that of hys fader kunde come.
And of the rygte kunde of Englonde, kyng Henry to wyue nome.
R. Gloucester, p. 353.

Myselfe was from Verona banished,
For practising to steale away a lady,
And heire and nece, alide vnto the duke.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 1.

NIFLE. Unless I am deceived (says Skinner), from the Fr. Neuf, new, q. d. Neufles, news. Tyrwhitt explains it,—trifles.

Wyatt. Complaint vpon Loue, &c.

Shore's wife was one also of his most secret counsell of thys heynous tresō we he lay nightlie.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 56.

—God saw the light was good
And light from darkness by the hemisphere Divided: light the day, and darkness night
He nam'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

—Nor let thine own inventions hope Things not reveal'd, which th' invisible king,
Onely omniscient hath suppress in night.

Id. Ib.

—Edmund, I thinke, is gone
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life.

Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 5.

Such is that wand'ring nightly shame which leades
Th' unwary passenger, vntill he treads
His last step on the steepe and craggy walles
Of some high mountain, whence he headlong falls.

Beaumont. Against absurd Loue.

Gal. Pride comfort your head-piece, lady; 'tis a weak one, and had need of a night-cap.

Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act i. sc. 1.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the aire to tempests, sooner than the valleys or plaines below. And therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischlefe.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 819.

Ah! would thou know'st how much it better were
To 'bide among the simple fisher-swaines;
No shrieking owl, no night-crow lodgeth here,
Nor is our simple pleasure mixt with pains.

P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 1.

And after him owls and night-ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things,
Of death and dolor telling sad tidings.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Duke. What is't you look for, sir, have you lost any thing?

John. Only my hat ith' scuffle; sure these fellows Were night-snaps.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act ii. sc. 1.

Cortex. All things are hush'd as Nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat.

Dryden. Indian Emperor, Act iii. sc. 2.

And as those nightly tapers disappear,
When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere;
So pale grows Reason at Religion's sight;
So dies, and so dissolves in supernatural light.

Id. Religio Laici.

NIGHTERTALE. Nighter-deal, the nocturnal (deal or) portion of the natural day, (Skinner.)

So hote he loved, that by nightertale

He slep no more than doth the nightingale.

Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 97.

"Arise, (quod she,) what haue you dronken dwale, [i. e. sleeping draught.]

Why slepen ye, it is no nitertale."—Id. The Court of Loue.

NIGHTINGALE. A. S. Nicht-gale; Dut. Nacht-gael; Ger. Nachtigal, from nicht, the night, and galan, to gale, to sing; because he sings at night. See the first quotation from Chaucer.

To matens went the lusty nightingale,
Within a temple shapen hauthorn wise,
He might not sleepe in all the nightertale,
But Domine labia gan he cry and gale.

Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

The nightingale with so merry a note
Answered him, that all the wood rong
So sodainly, that as it were a sote
I stood astonied; so was I with the song
Thorow rauished, that till late and long,
I ne wist in what place I was, ne where,
And ayen me thought she song euen by mine ere.

Id. The Flower and the Leaf.

Her short performance was no sooner try'd,
When she I sought, the nightingale reply'd:
So sweet, so shrill, so variously she sung,
That the grove echo'd, and the valleys rung:
And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood intranc'd, and had no room for thought.
But all o'er-pow'r'd with extasy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of Paradise.

Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

NIGHTMARE. Dut. Nacht-merrie; Ger. Nachtmar. In Sw. Mara is—incubus; in Ger. Mære, Parca; but Skinner thinks that Mære in Night-mare is—Equa quæ nobis accubat, vel porticis incubat. Warton (see the quotation from him) gives the true origin of our word; though it does not appear why "the spirit or spectre of the night" was in Runic theology called Mara. The meaning, ascribed by all, is an oppressive weight or burden, and may be formed of the A. S. Ma, and Er. See MORE, and ER, termination; and see INCUBUS.

Jesu Crist, and seint Benedight,
Blesse this hous from euery wicked whit,
Fro the nightes-mare.—Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3481.

Onely refering unto Christian considerations, what natural effects can reasonably be expected, when, to prevent the ephialtes, or night-mare we hang up an hollow stone in our stables.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 22.

Mara, from whence our night-mare is derived, was, in the Runic Theology, a spirit or spectre of the night, which seized men in their sleep, and suddenly deprived them of speech and motion.—Warton. Hist. of English Poetry, vol. i. Diss. 1.

NIGHTSPELL, i. e. the night-charm, (Tyr-whitt.)

Therewith the nightspel said he anon rightes.

Chaucer. The Miller's Tale, v. 3480.

NIHILITY. Lat. Nihilum, nihil; Fr. Nihilité, "Nullity, the being nothing, or of no value," (Cotgrave.)

I. Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded; and this we call pure *nihil*ity, or mere nothing.

Watts. Logic, pt. i. c. 2. s. 6.

NILL, v. A. S. Nillan, nolle, or non velle; compounded of na, not, and will-an, to will.

To will not, to be unwilling; to dissent, to deny, to refuse.

But whanne the word was herd that was seide Jhesus seyde to the prince of the synagoge nyle thou drede, oonli beleeve thou.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 5.

Whoso that nill beware by other men,
By him shal other men corrected be.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5762.

Wherefore in all thynges that reason is, in hym also is libertie of willyng and of nillyng.—Id. Boecius, b. v.

So whan he [Hale] seeth tyme at last,
That he may worche an other wo,
Shall no man tourne him therfro,
That hate nill his felonie Fulfil.

Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Yet nothing could my fixed mind remove,
But, whether will'd or nilled, friend or foe,
I am resolv'd the utmost end to prove.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

— With my Sovereigne's leave,
I'll wed thee to this man, will he, nill he.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Maid of the Mill, Act v. sc. 1.

NIM, v. } Goth. and A. S. Niman; Dut. and NIMMER. } Ger. Nemen; to take, to take away.
See NUM, and NUMSKULL.

To take, to take away, to deprive, to rob, to steal, to filch. It is still a common word among thieves.

So streyt he was, that they me ledde amydde weyes heye.
Seluer, that non man ne dorste yt nyme. they he yt seye.

R. Gloucester, p. 267.

In the south syde of Temese nyne batayles he nome
Agen the Deneyes the vorst ger of ys kynedom.—Id. p. 264.

He went his way, and with the coper he came,
And this chanon it in his hondes name
And of that coper weyed out an unce.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,765.

But sith we arne to Fortune comen,
And hath our sermon of her nomen
A wonder will I tell thee now.

Id. Rom. of the Rose.

So that anone by his aduise,
There was a priue counsaile nome,
The lordes ben to gether come.

Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

She fel, as she that was throug nome
Of loue, and so forth ouercome.—Id. Ib. b. v.

NIMBLE, adj. } Agilis, says Skinner,— NIMBLY. } “One who can do any thing NIMBLENESS. } quickly and easily; from the NIMBLESS. } verb, to nim.” and Junius notifies that num-ol is capax, able to take or receive. See NIM.

Active, agile, quick in motion or action; quick, speedy, alert.

Now the hande is the more nymble by the vse of some seates, and the legges and fete more swifte & sure by custome of goyng and rennyng.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 153.

I grant, that in pregnancie of wit, nimbleness of himmes, and politike inuentions, they generallie exceed vs.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 20.

His offering soon propitious fire from Heav'n Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

But still the tyrant sternely at him layd,
And did his yron axe so nimbly wield,
That many wounds into his flesh it made,
And with his burdenous blowes him sore did ouerlade.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

He could his weapon shift from side to side,
From hand to hand, and with such nimble sly
Could wield about, that, ere it were espi'd
The wicked stroke did wound his enemy
Behinde, beside, before, as he it list apply.

Id. Ib.

Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble-witted coun-cellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him; “There is a great difference betwixt you and me: a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace.”—Bacon. Apophegms, s. 124.

Capacious He.1 complains for want of room,
And seeks new plagues for multitudes to come,
Her nimble hands each fatal sister plies,
The sisters scarcely to the task suffice.

Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

Not of a nimble tongue, though now and then Heard to articulate like other men:
No jester, and yet lively in discourse,
His phrase well chosen, clear, and full of force.

Cowper. Tirocinium.

Nueve. Becman thinks novem is from novus, q. d. novissimus, the last (sc.) of the numerals. Vossius dissents. Martinius agrees with Becman as to the Lat.; and with regard to the Ger. he observes,—“Neig-en est inclinare, et inde numerus ille inclinatus dici queat.” This Wachter thinks not improbable; but what does numerus inclinatus mean?

Eng. Nip; and in A. S. the diminutive Nypele, a nipple, shows the word to have existed in that language also.

To pinch or press off sharply; to pinch, (sc.
with the teeth;) and, consequentially, to bite;
to pinch off, (sc. the germ or bud;) and hence,
to blight, to perish: (met.) to bite, to pinch, to hurt, to injure, (sc. by censure, rebuke, or sarcasm;) to reprehend, to satirize.

Bible, 1551. Jesus Syrach, c. 22.

This was no great curious sermon, but this was a nipping sermon, a pinching sermon, a byting sermon, it had a full bite, it was a nipping sermon, a rough sermon, and a sharpe biting sermon.—Latimer. A faithful Sermon before K. Edw.

Now when our Saviour had told the disciples of John his workes and miracles which he did, he addeth a pretty clause, and giveth them a good privie nippe, saying, And blessed is he that is not offended by me.—Id. Third Ser. in Advent.

For in skorne what could haue been spoken more nip- pingly, and therewithall more properly, than where the blessed apostle merily taunted the Corinthians, desiring them to pardon him, because he had put none of them to cost and charge.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1374.

Oria. I doe confess I'm too easie, too much woman,
Not coy enough to take affection;
Yet I can frown and nip a passion,
Even in the bud.

NITENCY. Lat. Nitens, from niti, to strive, to endeavour.

Endeavour, effort.

For the atoms of fire flowing in, in great numbers, and passing through with a very rapid motion, must needs accelerate the motion of these particles, from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 179.

NITID. It. and Sp. Nitido; Lat. Nitidus.
See NEAT.

Clean, clear, bright.

Thus we restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into the fire, and into aqua- fortis, which take off the adventitious filth that made the pure metal look of a dirty colour.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 685.

vertue at all. But the best nitre is found about Clytae in the marches of Macedonie, where there is most plentie thereof.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxi. c. 10.

But admirable is the nature of the lake Ascanius, and of certain fountaines about Chalcis, where the water above, and which floteth uppermost, is fresh and potable; but all

Whom traiterously the Greekes condemned to dye.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

As for nobilitie in particular persons; it is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle or building not in decay; or to see a faire timber tree, sound and perfect: how much more to behold an ancient noble family which hath stood against the waves and weathers of time.
Bacon. Ess. Of Nobilitie.

Ros. The commons hath he pil'd with grievous taxes
And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he finde
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 11.

Both the prerogatives and rights of the divine majesty are concerned, and also the perfection, nobilitation, and salvation of the souls of men.—More. Antidote against Idolatry, c. 2.

It most behoves the honourable race
Of mightie peeres true wisdom to sustaine,
And with their noble countenance to grace
The learned forheads, without gifts or gaine:
Or rather learn'd themselves behoves to bee;
That is the girlond of nobilitie.

Spenser. The Teares of the Muses.

The king of noblesse gaue charge vnto the friers of Leicester to see an honourable interment to be given to it.
Bacon. King Hen. VII. p. 3.

Would God, that any in this noble presense
Were enough noble, to be vpright judge
Of noble Richard: then true noblesse would Learne him forbearance from so foul a wrong.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act iv. sc. 1.

But thou whose noblesse keeps one stature still
And one true posture, though besiegd with ill
Of what ambition, faction, pride can raise.

Johnson, Epig. 102.

Pride, hautinesse, opinion, and disdaine:
The least of which, haunting a nobleman,
Loseth men's hearts, and leaues behind a stayne
Vpon the beautie of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

—Behold

Built nobly, pure the air, and light the soil,
Athens the eye of Greece, mother of arts
And eloquence, native to famous wits.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Know this, my lord, nobility of blood
Is but a glittering and fallacious good:
The nobleman is he whose noble mind
Is fill'd with inborn worth unborrow'd from his kind.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

He therefore that thinks he shows any nobleness, or height of mind, by a scurrilous reply to a scurrilous provocation, measures himself by a false standard, and acts not the spirit of a man, but the spleen of a wasp.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 7.

If these panegyrist are in earnest in their admiration of Henry the fourth, they must remember that they cannot think more highly of him than he did of the noblesse of France; whose virtue, honour, courage, patriotism, and loyalty were his constant theme.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

Say, what's nobility, ye gilded train!
Does nature give it, or can guilt sustain?
Blooms the form fairer, if the birth be high?
Or takes the vital stream a richer dye?
P. Whitehead. Honour, (1747.)

NO'CENT, adj. } It. Nocente; Lat. Nocens, NO'CENT, n. } from noc-ere, to hurt or NO'CUMENT. } harm. See INNOCENT.
NO'CIVE. } Doing hurt or harm, mischief or injury, hurtful, harmful, mischievous, injurious.

Nocent, not Innocent he is that seeketh to deface,
By word the thing, that he by deed had taught men to imbrace. Fox. Martyrs, p. 231. col. 2.

Rochester. Oh gentle M. Langdale, you ought not to reason after such a sort as you doe now, because that a trope or figurative speech is nocive somewhere, but not euery where, nor in this matter.—Id. Ib. Disputation about the Sacrament.

For all these ioyful nocumetes are the holy frutes of the whoredome of that holy whorish church.—Balc. Image, pt. ii.

The earle of Deuonshire, being interested in the bloud of Yorke that was rather feared then nocent.
Bacon. King Hen. VII. p. 213.

Him [the serpent] fast sleeping soon he found
In labyrinth of many a well self-rowl'd,
His head the midst, a round stor'd with subtle wiles:
Not yet in horrid shade or dismal den
Nor nocent yet: but on the grassie herb Fearless unfear'd he slept.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

To this question Garnet advisedly and resolvedly answered, That if the advantage were greater to the Catholic part, by taking away some innocents together with many nocents, then doubtless it should be lawful to kill and destroy them all.—State Trials, an. 1606. The Gunpowder Plot.

Surely it argues the value, that the very heathen put upon their chastity, when the very design against it, was thought fit to be prevented by the death of the innocent, and to be revenged upon the nocent, even to the subversion of a government.—South, vol. x. Ser. 8.

NOCK, to nick or notch, to make an incision, or cut into: to place (sc.) the shaft or arrow upon the notch.

Anus dicitur nock, quasi incisura, (Skinner.)

And ten brode arrowes held he there,
Of which five in his honde were,
But they were shaven well and dight, Nocked and feathered aright.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

The nocke of the shaft is diversely made, for some be great and full, some handsome and little; some wyde, some narowe, some deep.—Ascham. Taxophilus, b. ii.

And thus have you hearde what wode, what fashion, what knockinge, what peeing, a steel must have.—Id. Ib.

The fight is fearful; for stout Burbon brings His fresher forces on with such a shock,
That they were like to cut the archers' strings,
Ere they their arrows handsomely could nock.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

—Then tooke he [Pandarus] up his bow,
And nockt his shaft, the ground whence all their future
griefe did grow. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

—Noses, which

But when the date of nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetick snout.—Hudibras, b. i. c. 1.

NOCTAMBULO. One who walks (ambulat) in the night, (nocte;) and, consequentially, a sleep-walker.

Respiration being carried on in sleep, is no argument against its being voluntary. What shall we say of noctambulos?—Arbutnot. On Air.

NOCTILUCOUS. Lat. Nox, the night, and lucere, to shine.

Shining by night. Pennant (Zoology; in the margin) calls the Nereis, noctilucous.

This appearance was occasioned by myriads of noctilucous Nereids that inhabit the ocean, and on every agitation become at certain times apparent, and often remain sticking to the oars: and, like glow-worms, give a fine light.

Pennant.

NOCTIVAGATION. Lat. Nox, the night, and vagari, to wander.
Wandering by night.

Berners. Proissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 26.

Having neither health, nor leisure, nor convenience, for the making of nocturnal, and other celestial observations; I have taken the greater part, from the best astronomers of the present age.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, Pref.

Then feed on thoughts, that voluntarie move Harmonious numbers; as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid Tunes her nocturnal note.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. iii.

I have got a parcel of visions and other miscellanies in my noctuary, which I shall send to enrich your paper with on proper occasions.—Spectator, No. 586.

The reliques being conveniently placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them, and the nocturn and the matins for the honour of the saints, whose the reliques are.—Stillingfleet.

Such were the pleasing triumphs of the sky,
For James's late nocturnal victory.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. ii.

—The broad expanse of heav'n

NOEMA'TICAL. } Gr. Νομα, νοματος, the NOEMA'TICALLY. } mind, the intellect, or understanding.

Mental, intellectual; existing, originating in the mind.

Because when men think never so abstractedly and mathematically of a triangle, they have commonly some rude phantasm or picture of it before them in their imagination. Therefore many confidently persuade themselves that there is no other idea of a triangle or other figure, beside the bare phantasm or sensible idea impressed upon the soul from some individual object without; that is no active noematical idea inwardly exerted from the mind itself.

Cudworth. Morality, b. iv. c. 3.

By common notions I understand whatever is neomatically true, that is to say, true at first sight to all men in their wits, upon a clear perception of the terms, without any further discourse or reasoning.

H. More. The Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 2.

NOG, n. } Skinner refers to the Ger.
NODGING, n. } Nossel, mensura liquidi, a measure of liquids. In English the word is applied to—

The vessel or mug; and also to the liquor itself.

Dog Walpole laid a quart of nog on't,
He'd either make a hog or dog on't.
Swift. Upon the Horrid Plot.

For all your colloquing, I'd be glad of a knoggin;
But I doubt 'tis a sham; you wont give us a dram.
Id. To Dr. Sheridan, Dec. 14, 1719.

When his worship gave noggins of ale,
And the liquor was charming and stout,
O those were the times to regale,
And we footed it rarely about.

But for such as will not be content with that which is said, I wish Sir John de Bilbao would coniure vp William Ockam the father of the nominales (as Appion did Homer) for their better satisfaction herein.

Locus religiosus is that which is assigned to some office of religion, and *nominate*ly where the body of a dead person hath been buried.—Spelman. De Sepultura, c. 7.

I call it by a peculiar name, the nominal essence, to distinguish it from that real constitution of substances, upon which depends this nominal essence, and all the properties of that sort; which therefore, as has been said, may be called the real essence.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6. s. 2.

The nominalists were not only more than ever opposed by the other scholastics, the Scotists especially, but so persecuted by the court of Rome, and all the fautors of her usurpations, that their whole doctrine was condemned by Lewis the Eleventh, in a publick edict, before the end of the fifteenth century.—Bolingbroke. Ess. 4. s. 41.

While Tiberius Gracchus was creating new consuls, one of the nominalists suddenly fell down dead: however Gracchus proceeded and finished the creation.

About that time [the twelfth century] Roscelinus or Roscelinus, the master of the famous Abelard, introduced a new doctrine, that there is nothing universal but words or names. However, by his eloquence and abilities, and those of his disciple Abelard, the doctrine spread, and those who followed it were called Nominalists.

Reid. On the Intellectual Powers, Ess. 5. c. 6.

The principal cause, however, I am disposed to think, of the decline of the sect of Nominalists, was their want of some palpable example, by means of which they might illustrate their doctrine.

Hughes. Claudianus.

NONCE, anciently written nones or nanes; and once, (qv.) was formerly written ones, anes; in the expression—for the nonce, nonce is corruptly used for once; for the once, this once, the or this one thing, one occasion, for an especial purpose. Mr. Gifford observes,—“The aptitude of many of our monosyllables beginning with a vowel to assume the n is well known; but the progress of this expression is distinctly marked in our early writers; a ones, an anes; for the ones, for the nanes, for the nones, for the nonce.”

South, vol. v. Ser. 12.

How (will a wise and good man say) can I desire to prosper and flourish, while the state is in danger or distress? how can I grieve, seeing my country is in good condition? is it just, is it handsome, that I should be a non-conformist either in publick sorrow or joy?—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

By that Act [the Five Mile Act] passed in the Parliament held at Oxford the 9th of October, 1665, and entitled, An Act for restraining non-conformists from inhabiting corporations; the non-conforming ministers were prohibited, upon a penalty of forty pounds for every offence, to come, unless only in passing upon the road, within five miles of any city, corporation, &c.

Locke. Letter from a Person of Quality.

He [Stedman] removed to Oakingham, or Wokingham, in Berks, and thence, two years after, was ejected for nonconformity.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

Non-conformists are of two sorts; first, such as absent themselves from divine worship in the established church through total irreligion, or attend the service of another persuasion.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 4.

Another species of offences against religion are those which affect the established church, and these are either positive or negative; positive, by reviling its ordinances; or negative, by non-conformity to its worship.—Id. Ib.

they who have least deserved their stations.
Dryden. Georgics, Ded.

NON-JURING. } Not swearing; one who NONJUROR. } does not, or will not swear:
(sc. allegiance.) Usually applied to those persons, especially clergymen, who refused to take the oaths of allegiance to William III. at the Revolution.

Thus the papists and nonjurors have been doubly taxed for refusing to give proper securities to the government; which cannot be objected against the clergy.

Swift. Reasons against settling the Tithe of Hemp, &c.

The nonjuring prelates were Sancroft, Turner, Lake, Ken, White, Lloyd, Thomas and Frampton.
Smollett. History of England, an. 1689.

Every person refusing the same [oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration] who is properly called a non-juror, shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 9.

The character of a non-juror, which he [Law] maintained to the last, is a sufficient evidence of his principles in church and state; and the sacrifice of interest to conscience will be always respectable.—Gibbon. Memoirs of my own Life.

NON/PAREIL. Non, and pareil, Fr.; like, equal, even, or matching with. Lat. Par.

Having no like or equal, match or fellow; one unparalleled, unequalled, unmatched, unrivalled.

My lord and master loues you; O such loue
Could be but recompenc'd, though you were crown'd
The non-pareil of beautie.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 5.

In the mean time the most nonpareil beauty of the world, beauteous knowledge, standeth unregarded, or cloistered up in mere speculation.—Whitlock. Man. of the English, (1654.)

NONPLUS, v. } Non, not, and plus, more.
NONPLUS. } To do, to be able to do, no more; to disable from doing more.

And we have known some, who were confidently engaged in the other opinion; being put to read the beginning of Tully's offices, presently non-plus and confounded, in that first word quanquam.—Cudworth. Intell. System, p. 636.

And then for his eternity, which non-plusses the strongest and clearest conception, to comprehend how one single act of duration should measure all periods and portions of time, without any of the distinguishing parts of succession.

South, vol. i. Ser. 1.

So over and above it (the acknowledging of a creation) gives me this advantage, that, let it seem never so strange, uncouth, and impossible, the nonplus of my reason will yield a fairer opportunity to my faith.—Id. Ser. 2.

NON-POWER, i. e. impotence.

Yet besides is there mokell folke, of whiche he hath no commaundemente ne lordship, and there as lacketh his power, his nonpower entereth, where vnder springeth that maketh hem wretches.—Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

NON-PROFICIENT. One who is no pro- ficient, or not a proficient, or who has made no proficiency, who does not profit, gain, or benefit.

No marvel if we be whipped for dull non-proficients in God's school, if we be not taught fear and obedience by his so many judgments.—Bp. Hall. Ser. at Exeter, Sept. 1641.

There is no creature of whom we may not learn something; we shal have spent our time ill in this great school of the world, if in such store of lessons we be non-proficients in devotion.—Id. The Devout Soul, s. 6.

NON-RE/SIDENT. } One who does not NONRE/SIDENCE. } reside, (qv.) abide or dwell.

After these actes thus agreed, the commons made another acte for pluralities of benefices, none-residence, biyng and selling and takyng of fermes by spiritual persons.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 21.

As to non-residence, I believe there is no christian country upon earth, where the clergy have less to answer for upon that article. I am confident there are not ten clergymen in the kingdom, who properly speaking, can be termed non- residents; for surely we are not to reckon in that number those, who, for want of glebes, are forced to retire to the nearest neighbouring village for a cabin to put their heads in.
Swift. Arguments against the Power of Bishops.

Licensed pluralists are allowed to demise the living, on which they are non-resident, to their curates only; provided such curates do not absent themselves above forty days in one year.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

The leases of beneficed clergymen are farther restrained, in case of their non-residence, by statutes 13 Eliz. c. 20. &c.
Id. Ib.

NON-RESISTANT, adj. } Not resisting; not NONRES/STANCE. } standing against, or opposing.

This is that Ædipus, whose wisdom can reconcile inconsistent opposites, and teach passive obedience, and non- resistant principles to despise government, and to fly in the face of sovereign authority.—Arbuthnot.

The slavish principles of passive obedience and non- resistance, which had skulked perhaps in some old homily before king James the first, but were talked, written, and preached into vogue in that inglorious reign, and in those of his three successors, were renounced at the revolution by the last of the several parties who declared for them.

Bolingbroke. A Discourse upon Parties, Let. 8.

NON-SENCE. } i. e. not sense; that which

The speaker is a zealous dunce, or so.

Donne. Elegy by Mr. R. B. in Memory of Donne.

The accompt which Theodorus in Photius [treating of the Persian Magick] gives thereof, as also that other of Eudemus in Damascius, are both of them so nonsensical, that we shall Never was any thing more nonsensically pleasant.

L'Estrange. Translation of Quevedo.

Undoubtedly, whatsoever we preach of contentedness in want; no precepts can so gain upon nature, as to make her a non-sensitive.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 14.

You may rest satisfied; that what is nonsense upon a principle of reason, will never be sense upon a principle of religion.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

The literal sense is hard to flesh and blood,
But nonsense never can be understood.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

If any man uses these terms in such cases, he either uses them nonsensically, or in some new sense, diverse from their original and proper meaning.

NON-SO/LVENCY. Non-payment; insol- vency, (qv.)

Some of the purchasers themselves may be content to live cheap in a worse country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agencies; and, perhaps of non-solvencies in absence, if they let their lands too high.

Swift. Prop. for paying the National Debts.

NON-SPARING, i. e. sparing none; un-sparing any.

— Poore Lord, is't I

That chace thee from thy cuntry, and expose
Those tender limbs of thine, to the euent
Of the none-sparing warre?

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iii. sc. 2.

NON-SUIT, v. } The quotations explain the NO/NSUIT, n. } meaning and application of the word.

Formerly they [common pledges] were of use to answer to the king for the amercement of the plaintiff, in case he were nonsuited. He is adjudged not to follow or pursue his remedy as he ought to do, and thereupon a nonsuit or non prosequitur is entered; and he is said to be nonpros'd.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 20.

If either party neglects to put in his declaration plea, replication, rejoinder, and the like, within the times allotted by the standing rules of the court, the plaintiff, if the omission be his, is said to be nonsuit, or not to follow and pursue his complaint, and shall lose the benefit of his writ.—Id. Ib. c. 21.

NOOK. Lye refers to nock or notch; and Tooke believes them all to be the past part. of the verb to nick, incidere. Nook is applied to—

A small recess or retreat, (q. d. cut into a solid body,) a corner, a niche.

This poisons all, and minds of men doth marre,
It findeth nookes to creepe in for the noones.
